PREFACE

With the completion of the present volume the author accomplishes the task he set himself, when he determined to specialize in the law of decedents' estates and corporations, of writing a text-book on each of these subjects. The plan of this book is like that of his work on "New York Estates and Surrogates," that is, to begin at the logical starting-point (in the present treatise with a discussion of the law affecting "Promoters"), and to carry on consecutively to the final chapter on "Foreign Corporations." The author's endeavor in his prior book to make its contents speedily accessible to the busy practitioner by preparing a cyclopedic analysis as well as the usual index has not only been continued in the following pages but has been supplemented by a thumb index.

The law of corporations is so largely statutory that the author has printed the text of the various statutes affecting corporations at the end of the book in the alphabetical order in which they are found in the Consolidated Laws. He has also, in his citations, referred by section, chapter and year of enactment to the particular statute expounded in the apposite text, so that the careful lawyer might compare its wording with that of the statute as it stands when a concrete question is presented to him for answer.

The author acknowledges with thanks the permission of John N. Blair, Esq., Charles F. Bostwick, Esq., William H. Harkness, Esq., Donald Harper, Esq., and William Mason Smith, Esq., all of the New York Bar, to use various forms; and of Dean Chase, The Banks Law Publishing Company, The J. B. Lyon Company, and The Edward Thompson Company, to use various statutes; as well as the kindness of his publishers during the progress of his labors. He solicits suggestions for improvements in the book; and trusts it may be of help to his brother-lawyers.

FRANK H. TWYEFFORT.

PROMOTERS AND CORPORATORS.

B. Powers and Liabilities:

1. Under Agreements in General, § 2.

2. Under Agreements Inter Sese, § 3.

3. Under Secret Agreements for Personal Profit, § 4.

4. In Binding Corporation by Agreements, § 5.

5. Toward Subscribers for False Representations, § 5a.

II. Corporators, § 6.

§ 1. Promoters: Definitions and Distinctions.—A promoter is one who, before the incorporation or organization of a company has started, works to bring about such incorporation. He is distinguished from a corporator in that the latter does not exist until the incorporation has begun.

§ 2. Id.: Powers and Liabilities; Under Agreements in General.—While it is true that “ whenever a contract to form a corporation contemplates as a necessary feature or concomitant of the scheme of organization that the directors of the corporation when formed are to be deprived of their judgment and discretion in matters which come within the scope of their duty it will be declared void,” yet an agreement to form a corporation will be construed as meaning its formation on a lawful and honest basis, and “ it will not be assumed as matter of law that it was within the intention of the parties to organize a corporation, and have its stock issued in exchange for the property and rights of the plaintiff unless the directors or stockholders of the corporation should approve and ratify, after inquiry, the scheme as detailed in the contract.”<sup>1</sup> Equity will not compel specific performance of a contract to form a corporation if the parties to the contract are unable to agree upon the terms for the formation of the company and are unfriendly.<sup>2</sup> The evidence admissible

On the liability of promoters to the corporation and its members, to prove an agreement by one interested in the formation of a corporation to pay an attorney in its stock for services in launching it is discussed in the note case.<sup>3</sup>

§ 3. Id.: Under Agreements Inter Sese.—There is “no objection on the score of public policy, to an agreement between parties about to form a corporation, agreeing upon the general plan, upon which it is to be organized and conducted, so long as nothing is provided for inconsistent with the provisions of the statute, or immoral in itself;” e. g. an agreement vesting the management of the corporation in a firm, selling part of the consideration for the issue of stock to the corporation, “might not be binding upon the trustees of the corporation when organized, but such an agreement is not illegal.”<sup>4</sup> There is “no principle of public policy, which condemns an agreement between parties about to form a corporation, because by the arrangement, the capital stock is to be represented by property which they severally contribute, at a valuation agreed upon between themselves.”<sup>5</sup> A contract by which two people agree with a third to assist him in forming a corporation and to preclude any one from becoming a stockholder who would not agree in advance, in addition to paying cash for his holdings, that such third person should be employed as the corporation’s sole general agent so long as it lasted, subject to termination on six months’ notice, and should receive one third its gross receipts, is unenforceable as against public policy.<sup>6</sup> Individuals who, under their copartnership name, promote the organization of a corporation, are severally liable for each others’ misrepresentations and concealments made or done while engaged in such promotion.<sup>7</sup> An agreement by one promoter to take, own and hold one thousand shares, by another to take, own and hold nine hundred and ninety-eight shares, and by a third to take, own and hold two shares, and by the first, “if he shall at any time sell or assign nine hundred and ninety-eight shares,” to transfer the other two shares to the second, does not mean that the first must sell the nine hundred and ninety-eight basis only, a different question would be presented.”

shares, if at all, at one time, but that when the first, by one sale or many, had disposed in the aggregate of nine hundred and ninety-eight shares, then he would transfer the remaining two shares to the second.<sup>8</sup>

§ 4. Id.: Under Secret Agreements for Personal Profit.—A secret agreement whereby promoters of a corporation, on surrender of their right to receive certain preferred stock for their efforts as such, are to get a percentage of the corporation's annual profits, will not be enforced after stock of the corporation has been bought by third parties without notice of the secret arrangement.<sup>9</sup> "Neither law nor equity countenances the making of secret profits by a promoter or a director of a corporation on the sale of property to the corporation. . . . It is only where the promoter informs every subscriber or the director informs every fellow director and stockholder that he is personally interested, and of the amount of profit he expects to make on a sale to the corporation, that the promoter or director will be permitted to make or retain a profit on such a sale. . . . The burden is on the promoter or director to show that his dealings were fair and that no undue advantage has been taken of his fellow subscribers or stockholders."<sup>10</sup> A corporation itself may sue to make a promoter account for secret profits made by him through a sale of land to it.<sup>11</sup>

§ 5. Id.: In Binding Corporation by Agreements.—" . . . the promoters of a corporation are not the corporation. The legal body is distinct from the individuals who compose it. The statute confers no authority upon the promoters of a corporation to enter into preliminary contracts binding the corporation when it shall come into existence. . . . But the corporation is at liberty to refuse to sanction them, and if its sanction is obtained by the act or co-operation of directors who have a private interest, . . . the corporation may . . . resist an action for specific performance, at least in a case where it has not accepted the consideration and taken the benefit.”<sup>12</sup> “A subsequently formed corporation is not bound by an agreement between its promoters (citations). It is only where such an agreement is ratified by the corporation that it becomes binding upon it.”<sup>13</sup> Promoters can fetter the corporation they foster with no contracts, such as the number of directors who shall manage the corporation’s affairs.<sup>14</sup> A promotion agreement resulting in fraud on the corporation formed in connection therewith may be set aside by it upon discovery of the fraud.<sup>15</sup> One giving his note to promoters of a corporation pursuant to a proposal made by them is not liable thereon to the corporation formed fifteen months thereafter, if, long before incorporation, he rescinded the proposal, sought to get back his note, and was unable to do so solely because of false representations as to its being misplaced or lost.<sup>16</sup> Voluntary surrender by promoters of their right to receive corporate stock for their services precludes specific performance of a contract theretofore made by the corporation with them to issue to them preferred stock receiving a stipulated dividend from net earnings.<sup>17</sup> “While a corporation is not bound by the engagements made on its behalf by its promoters before its organization, it may, after it is organized, make such engagements its contracts by adopting them as its own. Less evidence tending to show adoption will be required to establish it where the officers were also the promoters, than where the officers and promoters were different persons.”<sup>18</sup> “. . . an agreement made in behalf of a corporation about to be formed, although not initially binding upon it, may, by the company’s acts, after it attains a legal existence, be so ratified as to become a corporate obligation. by such agreement.”<sup>19</sup> A contract made by one individual with another cannot be considered that of a corporation thereafter formed because the former individual became its president and stated to the latter that he was such corporation.<sup>20</sup> One seeking to recover from a corporation the value of services rendered partly at least before its incorporation should be permitted to prove his contract with the promoter of the corporation and its subsequent ratification thereof, and the services rendered thereunder.<sup>1</sup> One engaged to procure subscriptions to a corporation’s capital stock, which is to be organized, cannot bind the corporation by his agreement to take from a subscriber in payment of part of his subscription a check on a bank in which the subscriber had no funds, so as to preclude the corporation from suing on the check.<sup>2</sup> One accepting only as an officer of, and subscriber to stock of a corporation, the work of another in organizing the company, and this without knowledge that the latter claimed that he was personally responsible for the value of such work, cannot be held individually liable therefor.<sup>3</sup> Payments made by a company after incorporation in excess of a liability to an individual incurred after incorporation constitute ratification of a contract made with him prior to incorporation by the person who became the corporation’s president and treasurer.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>10</sup> Colton Improvement Co. v. Richter, 26 Misc. 26, 55 Supp. 486 (1899). The fact that some of the stockholders and directors believed and had some knowledge that the promoter was profiting by the sale of land to it does not prevent the company from holding him to account.

§ 5a. Id.: Toward Subscribers for False Representations.— Individuals promoting a corporation who make or conceal material facts are liable to those subscribers who are damaged by reliance thereon, whether such reliance is induced directly by the promoters or the latter’s agents.<sup>5</sup> “The promoter of a company, whether he be a director or not, who knowingly issues or sanctions the circulation of a false prospectus containing untrue statements of material facts naturally tending to mislead and to induce the public to purchase its stock or

Where there are a number of such promoters all the co-adventurers are held liable in damages for the fraud of an agent employed by them to effect the sale of the corporate securities without reference to their own moral guilt or innocence.”<sup>6</sup> Promoters of a corporation occupy, before its organization, a position of trust and confidence towards those whom they induce to invest in the enterprise, and if they do not disclose to such investors the price they are to pay for the subject-matter of the incorporation, or that they do not intend to exercise their options to purchase such matter unless sufficient funds are furnished by others to pay for the property and all the corporate organization expenses, leaving for distribution among themselves a majority of the stock, they are liable in damages for the loss sustained by those whom they induce to invest in the shares.<sup>7</sup> A statement by a promoter to one subscribing to a syndicate agreement without solicitation that the former’s subscription of $500,000 then appearing on the agreement, would be paid in cash does not amount to a fraudulent misrepresentation entitling the latter to rescind the agreement, if the subscription was paid by turning in stock instead of cash, provided the purchase by the syndicate managers of such stock was proper.<sup>8</sup> One buying stock and receiving certificates therefor pursuant to and in reliance upon circulars generally distributed reciting the organization of the corporation may recover the amount paid for such certificates from the one responsible for the purchase, certificates and circulars, if the corporation was not in fact organized.<sup>9</sup> Persons devising a fraudulent scheme for the consolidation of certain railroads owned and controlled by them and issuing bonds upon false representations as to the timber lands to be furnished as added security under the mortgage to make the bonds secure and salable, may be made liable to one injured thereby; and the corporation, too, if it was the instrumentality employed by them.<sup>10</sup>

§ 7. Incorporation: Definitions, Distinctions and Nature of, In General.—The term corporation as used in the New York State Constitution must be construed to include all associations and joint stock companies having any of the powers or privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships.<sup>1</sup> "A corporation shall be either, (1) a municipal corporation; (2) a stock corporation, or (3) a non-stock corporation. A stock corporation shall be either, (1) a moneyed corporation; (2) a railroad or other transportation corporation, or (3) a business corporation. A non-stock corporation shall be either, (1) a religious corporation; (2) a membership corporation, or (3) any corporation other than a stock corporation."<sup>2</sup> The present treatise has to do with business stock corporations. "A 'stock corporation' is a corporation having a capital stock divided into shares, and which is authorized by law to distribute to the holders thereof dividends on shares of the surplus profits of the corporation. A corporation is not a stock corporation because of having issued certificates called certificates of stock, but which are in fact merely certificates of membership, and which is not authorized by law to distribute to its members any dividends on shares of profits arising from the operations of the corporation."<sup>3</sup> "A 'domestic corporation' is a corporation incorporated by or under the laws of the State or colony of New York. Every corporation which is not a domestic corporation is a foreign corporation, except as provided by the code of civil procedure for the purpose of construing such code."<sup>4</sup> "A corporation is somewhat like a partnership, if one were possible, conducted wholly by agents where the copartners have power to appoint the agents, but are not responsible for their acts. The power to manage its affairs resides in the directors, who are its agents, but the power to elect directors resides in the stockholders. The right to vote for directors and upon propositions to increase the stock or mortgage the assets, is about all the power the stockholder has. So long as the management is honest, within the corporate powers and involves no porations described in accordance with this classification shall include all corporations theretofore formed belonging to such class."

The term "person" used in the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to proceedings for the condemnation of real property includes a corporation. C. C. P. § 3358.

waste, the stockholders cannot interfere, even if the administration is feeble and unsatisfactory, but must correct such evils through their power to elect other directors.”<sup>5</sup> “The title to the property of a company is in the fictitious entity called the corporation, and if all the stock were owned by a single person he could not by his conveyance affect the legal title.”<sup>6</sup> That officers of a corporation own about all its stock does not permit them to appropriate its property as their own; and if they do, they are as liable as if they took the property of an individual.<sup>7</sup>

§ 8. Id.: Partnership and Joint Venture.—“It is said . . . that the corporation here is in effect nothing more than an incorporated partnership. This is true to a limited extent, but I do not assent to that doctrine in its full scope and entirety. Persons forming a corporation thereby gain many immunities and privileges of which they are not possessed as members of a partnership. Their liability for the debts and obligations of the business is limited and the death of one of the members does not work a dissolution of the corporation, as it does in the case of a partnership. For these privileges the parties have to pay a price. They have not the same unrestricted control and management of their enterprise as they would have as partners, nor is the right of a single party to the joint enterprise safeguarded either as against the State or against the other parties in the case of a corporation as in the case of a partnership.”<sup>8</sup> “. . . parties assuming to act in a corporate capacity without a legal organization as a corporate body, are liable as partners to those with whom they contract . . . ; but when it is sought to charge any one of them as a corporator or as a partner, the same rule applies to each. If as a corporator, he must be shown to have been such when the contract sued upon was made (citation). If as a partner he must be shown to have been a member of the firm when the contract sued upon was made.”<sup>9</sup> Persons receiving goods are liable as partners therefor if it develop that the company through which they bought them was not a corporation (though they thought it was) because of defects in organization.<sup>10</sup> "A joint adventure between persons for the business of purchasing or selling property may create a quasi partnership relation, which will subject him to the responsibility to account to whom, or by whom, property has been intrusted, or received. Those, however, who engage in the formation of a company or corporation, are not partners, whatever their relations in the event of a successful termination. If the scheme prove abortive, the parties to it, certainly, are remitted to their former situation."<sup>11</sup> A syndicate agreement by which a particular railroad is to be acquired, extended, another road built, coal properties along such roads' routes acquired, and the sale or transfer thereof to a corporation and the division of the money or securities received therefor among the syndicate subscribers accomplished, is not strictly a partnership, though it has many of a partnership's features, but is what is now generally known as a joint venture.<sup>12</sup> A syndicate agreement under which the subscribers have no right, title or interest as such in properties to be acquired, but only the right upon the termination or closing out of the syndicate to their respective shares of the securities or moneys received by the syndicate managers for the properties does not constitute the parties thereto partners as between themselves.<sup>13</sup>

§ 9. Id.: De Facto and De Jure Corporations.—"When it has fully complied with the law under which it is organized, it is a corporation de jure; but where the persons desiring to form such a corporation have made the attempt to comply with the law and have failed in some essential matter, and afterwards have done business under such defective organization, then it is known as a corporation de facto. But it will be observed in cases of de facto corporations there must have been at least an attempt made to organize under some law. If no such attempt has been made, and yet parties assume to act as if there had, the concern is not even a de facto corporation, but a sham and a fraud, and all the parties connected with it will be held liable as copartners and not as members of a corporation. Thus it will be seen that two things are necessary to be shown in order to establish the existence of a corporation de facto: First, the existence of a charter or some law under which a corporation with the powers assumed might lawfully be created; second, a user by the party to the action of the rights claimed to be conferred by such charter or law.”<sup>14</sup> “. . . as against all persons who have entered into contracts with bodies assuming to act in a corporate capacity, it is sufficient for such bodies to show themselves to be corporations de facto. This cannot be done by simply showing that they have acted as corporations for any period of time, however long. Two things are necessary to be shown, in order to establish the existence of a corporation de facto, viz.: 1, The existence of a charter, or some law under which a corporation with the powers assumed might be lawfully created; and, 2, a user by the party to the suit, of the rights claimed to be conferred by such charter or law. . . . parties recognizing the existence of corporations by dealing with them, have no right to object to any irregularity in their organization or any subsequent abuse of their powers, not connected with such dealing. As long as these are overlooked or tolerated by the State, it is not for individuals to call them in question.”<sup>15</sup> “. . . so long as upon the face of the certificate [of incorporation] a corporation was apparently organized, as to persons dealing in good faith upon the strength of such organization it should be held that such incorporation was valid, and that until impeached in a direct proceeding, or at least in some action where the fact was alleged and an opportunity given to meet the issue, such certificate would be conclusive.”<sup>16</sup> “. . . under . . . general acts for the formation of corporations, if the papers filed, by which the corporation is sought to be created, are colorable, but so defective that, in a proceeding on the part of the State against it, it would for that reason be dissolved, yet by acts of user under such an organization it becomes a corporation de facto, and no advantage can be taken of such defect in its constitution, collaterally, by any person.”<sup>17</sup> A corporation organized by filing the requisite certificate in the offices of the Secretary of State and County Clerk, which has exercised its franchise, made calls on its stockholders, erected a building and done other acts in exercise of corporate rights is a valid de facto and de jure corporation as between its stockholders and all third persons until the State shall question its existence.<sup>18</sup> When the proceedings for the incorporation of a company are regular upon their face and it, while in the actual exercise of all its corporate functions, is recognized by the law-making power of the State as a corporation, it becomes by such recognition, ipso facto, a legal corporation.<sup>19</sup> A corporation organized under a legislative enactment later found void and which has exercised corporate powers under the act is a corporation de facto, if not de jure, and its existence can be terminated only by the judgment of a competent court or an express act of the legislature.<sup>20</sup> The mere execution of a certificate of incorporation without any action taken towards filing it or any statutory step taken to comply with the law does not make the corporation a de facto corporation, but at most merely constitutes an agreement by the signers of the certificate inter sese, probably rendering them liable as partners in doing business in the corporate name.<sup>1</sup> The filing of a certificate of incorporation signed by the incorporators above the attestation clause, the execution of which is acknowledged by them, and to which a certificate of acknowledgment is subjoined, when followed by action by the incorporators as though the corporation were duly formed, is at least sufficient to constitute a de facto corporation.<sup>2</sup>

§ 11. Id.: Governing Statutes, In General.—The statute (hereinafter given in full) permits three or more persons to become a stock corporation, by making, signing, acknowledging and filing a prescribed certificate, for any lawful business purpose except that of a moneyed corporation, of a corporation provided by the banking, insurance, railroad and transportation corporations’ laws, of an educational institution or of a corporation which may be incorporated as provided in the education law, or of conducting the practice of law.<sup>5</sup> The certificate of incorporation of any corporation may contain any provision for the regulation of the business and the conduct of the affairs of the corporation, and any limitation upon its powers, which does not exempt its directors and stockholders from the performance of any obligation or the performance of any duty imposed by law.<sup>6</sup> If authorized so to do by a provision in its certificate of incorporation, a domestic or foreign stock corporation may purchase, acquire, hold and dispose of the stocks, bonds and other evidences of indebtedness of any corporation, domestic or foreign, and issue in exchange therefor its stock, bonds or other obligations.<sup>7</sup> “A corporation organized under a general law is upon precisely the same footing as one constitutionally organized under a special law which contains all the provisions of the general law.”<sup>8</sup> “Every act incorporating a company for private gain and generally all acts relating to a single corporation are private acts, while an act relating to all corporations would be a public act. So far as we have been able to discover it has never before been seriously contended that an act incorporating a company with private capital to be solely controlled by a board of directors selected from the stockholders and the profits of which are to be divided upon the capital stock is not a private corporation.”<sup>9</sup> A corporation having charter

A construction will be given to a statute incorporating a company so as to make it constitutional, if possible, so that if an original legislative enactment does not contravene the constitutional mandates that only one subject be embraced in legislative acts which must be expressed in the title and that no private bill shall provide for building bridges, amendments thereto violating such constitutional provisions will be divorced from the original act which will be permitted to stand.<sup>16</sup> "A title purporting that an act provides for pneumatic transportation would not be sufficient for an act authorizing the construction and operation of a horse railway or a steam railway;" and a title indicating only the transportation of passengers and property through pneumatic tubes by atmospheric pressure is not sufficient for an act permitting the creation of a railroad.<sup>17</sup> The title "An act to incorporate the Economic Power and Construction Company" to a legislative statute is not sufficiently specific to permit the insertion in it of power to the company to use highways for the creation, transmission and utilization of power, under the constitutional prohibition that "no private or local bill, which may be passed by the legislature, shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title."<sup>18</sup> "Persons, or corporations even, may waive in some matters, and upon some occasions, a constitutional or statutory provision in their favor. . . . Although the provision as to a local act containing but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title, is of a public nature and was placed in the Constitution for the purpose of preventing surprises as to the object and purpose of any proposed legislation, yet when an act has been so passed, and its enactments bear upon the private rights of an individual, the constitutional provision then becomes as to him, one which is, within the meaning of the expression, enacted for his benefit, and it is then a matter which such individual may, as to his private rights, waive the benefit of, and consent to perform or submit to the requirements of the act, the same as if the constitutional provision had not been violated. And when once such waiver has been made and such consent been given, the party so waiving and consenting

§ 13. Id.: Legislative Control over Charters.—The State Constitution provides that all general laws and special acts passed pursuant to its authorization to corporations to incorporate under general laws and special acts may be altered from time to time or repealed.<sup>20</sup> The Constitutional right to alter or repeal general laws and special acts forming corporations applies also to the charters of corporations organized under such laws and acts.<sup>1</sup> “A corporation is subject to the general statutes of the State of its organization applicable to its conduct and management as well as to the reservation of the right on the part of the Legislature to alter its charter by subsequent laws, and a stockholder must be regarded as consenting not only to the existing law but to such alterations as may be made.”<sup>2</sup> A charter secured by a corporation by compliance with a statute couched in general terms does not grant an exclusive privilege to do the things empowered by the statute nor preclude the grant of another charter for a similar franchise.<sup>3</sup> “Equal protection of the law does not require a State to grant to each corporation that it organizes the same power to transact business or in relation to its business;” so that a statute of the State which “regulates the method of transacting business of certain corporations which it has

<sup>2</sup> Martin v. Remington-Martin Co., 95 A. D. 18, 88 Supp. 573 (1904). Promoters agreed “that the capital stock of the ——— company is to consist of $150,000 common stock” and certain preferred stock. The company when formed arranged in good faith to issue additional common stock. Plaintiff, one of the promoters, became a director of the company and participated in enactment of by-law giving each stockholder the right to buy proportionately any increase of the capital stock, when made. An injunction against issuing additional common stock was refused.

Acts which do no more than regulate and control the internal management of a corporation, so far as it has relation to the public and concerns the policy of the State, are within the power [of the Legislature under the State Constitution] to alter and repeal, even though the exercise of the power adds to the burden of the stockholder by increasing his liability, or diminishes the value of his stock, or changes the name, offices or proportion in management and control of the corporation. Within this power under this rule must necessarily fall the right to change the capital stock of the corporation as to amount, kind and classification."<sup>5</sup> A reservation in the Legislature of power to alter, amend or repeal all laws and charters of incorporation gives it authority to amend the charter of a corporation so as to take from stockholders of a corporation the vote for directors and give it to policyholders.<sup>6</sup> "The legislative power to amend a corporate charter, where it exists at all — whether by virtue of a State Constitution or a general law of the State reserving such right — includes the right to repeal a provision exempting the property of the corporation from taxation."<sup>7</sup> "The right to amend a charter, however, does not include the right to take away money invested in reliance thereon, or property acquired thereunder. § 17. Id.: Stock, Capital and Stockholders.—The subjects of stock, capital stock and stockholders are discussed at length hereinafter.<sup>2</sup>

What statements a certificate of incorporation must contain with reference to its capital stock depends to some extent upon whether the shares thereof have or do not have a nominal or par value. If the shares have a nominal or par value the certificate of incorporation must contain (1) the number of shares of which the capital stock is to consist, each of which must be not less than five nor more than one hundred dollars, and (2) the amount of capital with which the corporation will begin business, which must be not less than five hundred dollars.<sup>3</sup> If the shares have no nominal or par value the certificate of incorporation may provide for the issuance of the shares of stock of the corporation, other than preferred stock having a preference as to principal, without any nominal or par value, by stating in such certificate, in lieu of any statements as to the amount or the maximum amount of its capital stock or the number of shares into which it is to be divided or of the amount or the par value of such shares, as follows: (1) the number of shares that may be issued by the corporation; (2) if any of such shares be preferred stock, the preferences thereof, and, if such preferred stock or any part thereof have a preference as to principal, (a) the amount of such preferred stock having such preference, (b) the particular character of such preferences, and (c) the amount of each share thereof (which must be five dollars or some multiple of five dollars, but not more than one hundred dollars); (2) the amount of capital with which the corporation will carry on business, which amount must not be less than the amount of preferred stock (if any) authorized to be issued with a preference as to principal, plus a sum equivalent to five dollars or to some multiple of five dollars for every share authorized to be issued other than such preferred stock; but in no event must the amount of such capital be less than five hundred dollars.<sup>4</sup> The original or amended certificate of incorporation of any stock corporation may contain a provision expressly authorizing the issue of the whole or any part of the capital stock as partly paid stock, subject to calls thereon until the whole thereof has been paid in.<sup>5</sup> Every business corporation formed under the Business Corporations Law may be or become a full liability corporation by inserting a statement in the certificate of incorporation that the corporation thereby formed is intended to be a full liability corporation.<sup>6</sup>

Unless otherwise provided in the certificate of incorporation, every stockholder of record of a stock corporation is entitled at every meeting of the corporation to one vote for every share of stock standing in his name on the books of the corporation.<sup>7</sup> Our statutes permit the certificate of incorporation to provide what right to vote various classes of stockholders shall possess, e. g., that preferred stockholders shall be deprived of voting power.<sup>8</sup> If the certificate of a domestic stock corporation so provide, it may issue preferred stock and common stock and different classes of preferred stock.<sup>9</sup> The certificate of incorporation of any corporation may contain any limitation upon the powers of its stockholders which does not exempt them from the performance of any obligation or the performance of any duty imposed by law.<sup>10</sup>

§ 18. Id.: Principal Business Office.—For a discussion of the subject of the residence of a corporation for purposes of suit, taxation, and so forth, consult the references in the note.<sup>11</sup>

A stock corporation's certificate of incorporation must contain the city, village or town in which its principal business office is to be located, and, if it is to be located in the City of New York, the borough therein in which it is to be located.<sup>12</sup> The statement as to a corporation's residence required by statute to be inserted in its certificate of incorporation cannot be therein qualified.<sup>13</sup>

§ 20. Id.: Directors.—A full treatment of “Directors” will be found further on in this book.<sup>17</sup>

A stock corporation's certificate of incorporation must contain, with regard to its directors, (1) the names and post-office addresses of the directors for the first year, and (2) the number of its directors, not less than three.<sup>18</sup> Unless otherwise provided in the certificate of incorporation each director must be a stockholder.<sup>19</sup> The certificate of incorporation of any corporation may contain any limitation upon the powers of its directors which does not exempt them from the performance of any obligation or the performance of any duty imposed by law.<sup>20</sup> The law permits the division in a certificate of incorporation of the directors of the corporation into two or more classes whose terms of office shall respectively expire at different times.<sup>1</sup> At least one of the directors of the corporation must be a citizen of the United States and a resident of New York State.<sup>2</sup>

§ 21. Id.: Subscribers.—A stock corporation's certificate of incorporation must contain, as regards the subscribers thereto: (1) Their names and post-office addresses, and (2) a statement of the number of shares of stock which each agrees to take in the corporation.<sup>3</sup> The statute requiring in a certificate of incorporation the names and post-office addresses of the subscribers to its stock does not require that the certificate shall be signed by the individual subscriber, as only the incorporators need sign it.<sup>4</sup> When a certificate of incorporation is circulated in an incomplete state in order to procure subscriptions, the mere signing of it "cannot be regarded as binding the signer to abide by such filling up of blanks and supplying of wanting provisions as any one may choose to insert;" but his assent must be had to the completed paper.<sup>5</sup>

§ 22. Id.: Filing, Recording and Indexing.—The fees and taxes payable on incorporation are shortly treated.<sup>6</sup> The status of those signing a certificate of incorporation which is defectively signed, filed, recorded, etc., is discussed in a previous section.<sup>7</sup> Every certificate of incorporation must be filed (1) in the office of the Secretary of State, and be by him duly recorded and indexed in books specially provided therefor; and either a certified copy of such certificate with a certificate of the Secretary of State of such filing and record or a duplicate original of such certificate must be filed and similarly recorded and indexed (2) in the office of the clerk of the county in which the office of the corporation is to be located.<sup>8</sup> "The filing of the proposed certificate of incorporation is to effect an incorporation. . . . It is upon making, signing, acknowledging and filing the certificate that a proposed corporation becomes a corporation."<sup>9</sup> The Secretary of State is not required to file a certificate of incorporation containing provisions unauthorized by law.<sup>10</sup> The Secretary of State has a right to pass on a question as to the form of a certificate of incorporation and as to whether or not the applicant is entitled to have it filed under the statute under which the company is sought to be organized, subject to review in a proper proceeding.<sup>11</sup> It seems that the district in which application should be made for mandamus to compel the Secretary of State to file a certificate of incorporation is not dependent on the location of his office but on the district in which the material facts occurred.<sup>12</sup> When a certificate of incorporation is accepted and filed by the Secretary of State with the same name as that of an existing corporation, or when the name so nearly resembles that of the existing corporation as to be calculated to deceive, the action of the Secretary of State is not conclusive and the courts may by judgment in equity grant relief to the aggrieved prior corporation; but a writ of certiorari to review the Secretary of State's action is not proper.<sup>13</sup> It seems that if the Secretary of State refuses to file a certificate of incorporation on the ground that the name proposed for the company is the same as or deceitfully similar to that of an existing corporation, the only adequate remedy to the established company would be by writ of certiorari.<sup>14</sup>

If either of the certificates of incorporation is lost or destroyed after filing, a certified copy of the other certificate may be filed in the place of the one so lost or destroyed and as of the date of its original filing, and such certified copy has the same force and effect as the original certificate had when filed.<sup>14a</sup>

Id.: To Correct or Add to Purposes of.—The supreme court may, (1) upon due cause shown, (2) and proof made, and (3) upon notice (a) to the attorney-general, and (b) to such other persons as the court may direct, and (4) upon such terms and conditions as it may impose, amend any certificate of incorporation which (5) fails to express the true object and purpose of the corporation, so as to truly set forth such object and purpose. When an amended or supplemental certificate is filed, an entry must be made upon the margin of the index and record of the original certificate of the date and place of record of every such amended certificate. Such an amendment is without prejudice to any pending action or proceeding or to any rights previously accrued.<sup>6</sup>

Any domestic stock corporation may alter its certificate of incorporation so as to include therein any purposes, powers or provisions (a) which at the time of such alteration may apply to corporations engaged in a business of the same general character, or (b) which might be included in the certificate of a corporation organized under any general law of New York State for a business of the same general character, by filing (1) an amended certificate of incorporation (a) in the manner provided for the original certificate of incorporation, (b) executed by the president and secretary of the corporation, stating (c) the alteration proposed and (d) that it has been duly authorized by a vote of a majority of the

§ 26. Id.: To Change Office and Place of Business.—Change of its principal office and place of business from the city, town or county either named in its certificate of incorporation or to which it may have been previously changed under the law, to any other city, town or county in New York State in which it may desire actually to transact and carry on its regular business from day to day, may be made by a domestic stock corporation (except a moneyed one) at any time, provided such change (1) has been authorized by unanimous consent of the stockholders expressed in writing and duly acknowledged and filed in the office of the Secretary of State, or (2) has been authorized by a vote of the stockholders of such corporation at a special meeting of the stockholders called for that purpose, or (3) has been effected by an act of the Legislature creating a separate and distinct county wholly within the limits and boundaries of a then existing county or counties. In any of such cases (1) a certificate must be signed by (a) the president and (b) secretary and (c) a majority of the directors of such corporation, which (2) must be verified by the oaths of all the persons signing it, and (3) must be filed, when so signed and verified, in the office (a) of the Secretary of State, and a duplicate thereof in the office (b) of the clerk of the county from which such principal office and place of business is about to be removed or changed, and another in the office (c) of the clerk of the county to which such removal or change is to be made, whereupon the principal office and place of business of such corporation is changed as stated in such certificate. The certificate must state (1) the name of the corporation, (2) the city, town and county where its principal office and place of business was originally located, and to which it may have been subsequently changed, and (3) the city, town and county to which it is desired to change such principal office and place of business, and (4) that it is the purpose of such corporation actually to transact and carry on its regular business from day to day at such place, and (5) that such change has been authorized according to the pro-

§ 32. Name: Governing Statutes.—The conditions imposed by law upon choosing a name for a stock corporation are these: (1) no certificate for the incorporation of a company having (a) the same name as a corporation authorized to do business under the laws of New York State, or (b) a name so nearly resembling it as to be calculated to deceive, can be filed or recorded in any office for the purpose of effecting its incorporation, or of authorizing it to do business in New York State; (2) no business stock corporation can be authorized to do business in New York State unless (a) its name has such word or words, abbreviation, affix or prefix, therein or thereto, as will clearly indicate that it is a corporation as distinguished from a natural person, firm or co-partnership; or (b) such corporation uses with its corporate name, in New York State, such an affix or prefix; (3) no stock business corporation can be organized in New York State with the word “trust”, “bank”, “banking”, “insurance”, “assurance”, “indemnity”, “guarantee”, “guaranty”, “title”, “casualty”, “surety”, “fidelity”, “bonding”, “savings”, “investment”, “loan”, or “benefit”, as part of its name.<sup>3</sup> Any corporation other than a moneyed corporation who, or which within New York State, directly or indirectly or through agents or representatives transacts business under, or in anywise uses a corporate name or a corporate title with the words “trust”, “bank”, “banking”, “insurance”, “assurance”, “indemnity”, “guarantee”, “ guaranty ”, “ savings ”, “ investment ”, “ loan ”, “ benefit ”, as a part of such name or title, is guilty of a misdemeanor.<sup>4</sup> The word “ company ” in the name of a corporation does not satisfy the statutory requirement that a corporate name must have as part of it some word, abbreviation, etc., which will clearly indicate that it is a corporation.<sup>5</sup>

§ 33. Id.: Protection of.—“ The right of a man to use his own name in his own business the law protects, even when such use is injurious to another who has established a prior business of the same kind and gained a reputation which goes with the name. But in such case the courts require that the name shall be honestly used, and they permit no artifice or deceit, designed or calculated to mislead the public and palm off the business as that of the person who first established it and gave it its reputation (citations). It is well settled that an exclusive right may be acquired in the name in which a business has been carried on, whether the name of a partnership or of an individual, and it will be protected against infringement by another who assumes it for the purposes of deception, or even when innocently used without right to the detriment of another, and this right, which is in the nature of a right to a trade mark, may be sold or assigned (citation). In respect to corporate names the same rules apply as to the names of firms or individuals, and an injunction lies to restrain the simulation and use by one corporation of the name of a prior corporation which tends to create confusion and to enable the later corporation to obtain, by reason of the similarity of names, the business of the prior one. The courts interfere in these cases, not on the ground that the State may not affix such corporate names as it may elect to the entities it creates, but to prevent fraud, actual or constructive. The names of corporations organized under general laws, and in most other cases, are chosen by the promoters, and it would be an easy way to escape from the obligations which are enforced as between individuals, if a corporation were granted immunity by reason of their corporate character. . . . Whether the court will interfere in a particular case must depend upon circumstances; the identity or similarity of the names; the identity of the business of the prospective corporations; how far the name is a true description of the kind and quality of the articles manufactured or the business carried on; the extent of the confusion which may be created or apprehended, and other circumstances which might justly influence the judgment of the judge in granting or withholding the remedy."<sup>6</sup> A corporation is protected in the use of its trade as well as its corporate name.<sup>7</sup> A corporation named in part after the family name of one who had conducted the business it conducts before he sold out to it may not enjoin either him after it has discharged him from its employ or another of his family and name who has employed him from conducting the same business under their own family name, although it may enjoin a corporation formed by them with such family name in a title very like the complainant's from using such name in the same business.<sup>8</sup> One Albert Romeike and another, officers and employees of a corporation named, after an ancestor of the former, "Henry Romeike" and which advertises itself as "Henry Romeike, Inc.," may lawfully do a like business as such corporation in the same city, but a different neighborhood, after leaving its employ, under the name of "Albert Romeike Co., Inc.," being a company incorporated by them, provided they do not use such name dishonestly nor resort to any artifice to mislead the public as to the identity of the two businesses.<sup>9</sup> One who has by his own voluntary act given a corporation the right to use his name as and in its corporate name cannot avail himself of the statute permitting a person ground that it so nearly resembles that of the complaining corporation as to be calculated to deceive unless there was fraudulent intent by the complained-of company to appropriate the corporate complainant's name or any part of it; but in such a case the court may withhold its equitable aid in the exercise of a sound discretion as the circumstances require, and only when deception or confusion has in fact resulted from the use of the name or it appears that such result is likely to follow will it be time for the court to exercise its extraordinary powers.<sup>15</sup> While a court cannot change the name of a corporation incorporated in violation of the statute prohibiting the incorporation of a company having a name so nearly resembling that of an existing corporation as to be calculated to deceive, it can and will enjoin it from using such name without other appropriate words to distinguish the business it conducts, like the older corporation's, from the other's.<sup>16</sup> A corporation is entitled to enjoin the use by another of a name similar to the one under which it has manufactured and sold a commercial article if such use makes for deception and injury, and the two parties are dealing in the same or substantially similar articles; and it is immaterial that the distinctive and similar features of both names are a combination of geographical terms, that there was no intent to produce confusion in the selection of the similar name, or that no confusion has yet resulted.<sup>17</sup> It seems that a corporate name "The German-American Hand Crochet Button Works" would be refused a corporation if another corporation was already in existence called "German-American Button Co."<sup>18</sup> The name "The Columbian Chemical Company" so nearly resembles the name "Columbia Chemical Company" that if a company has been duly incorporated with the latter name

§ 36. Organization: First Meeting of Incorporators and Directors.— The first step in the organization of a corporation is the meeting of the incorporators, at which it is proper to accept notification of the due filing of the certificate of incorporation and of payment of the organization tax, and to adopt by-laws. The next step is the first meeting of the directors, at which the officers of the corporation are chosen, its seal is adopted, its form of stock certificate is approved and the secretary instructed to procure a stock certificate book and stock transfer book and ledger, call is made for payment by subscribers to the capital stock on account of their subscriptions, filing of a certificate of payment of one-half the authorized stock is directed, the principal office and the bank for the company's deposits are designated, the resolution for the method of signing cheques is passed, and the Secretary is directed to keep the stock certificate book and book of account, transfer ledger or register as prescribed by law.

§ 37. By-Laws: Governing Statutes.—Every corporation has power, though not specified in the law under which it is incorporated, to have (1) succession for the period specified in its by-law (or certificate of incorporation, and perpetually when no period is specified); and to make by-laws, not inconsistent with any existing law, for (2) the management of its property, the (3) regulation of its affairs, (4) the transfer of its stock, (5) the calling of meetings of its members; (6) the fixing of the amount of stock which must be represented at meetings of the stockholders in order to constitute a quorum, unless otherwise provided by law;<sup>1</sup> (7) the fixing of the number of directors necessary to constitute a quorum at a number less than a majority of the board, but at least equal to one-third of its number;<sup>2</sup> (8) prescribing the powers and duties of the president, secretary, treasurer and other officers, agents and employees of the corporation;<sup>3</sup> (9) prescribing the manner of the appointment of the inspectors of election.<sup>4</sup> By-laws duly adopted at a meeting of the members of the corporation control the action of its directors; and no by-law adopted by the board of directors regulating the election of directors or officers is valid unless published for at least once a week for two successive weeks in a newspaper in the county where the election is to be held, and at least thirty days before such election.<sup>5</sup> Subject to the by-laws, if any, adopted by the members of a corporation, the directors may make necessary by-laws of the corporation.<sup>6</sup> When the directors of any corporation for the first year of its corporate existence hold over and continue to be directors after the first year, because of their neglect or refusal to adopt the by-laws required to enable the stockholders to hold the annual election for directors, all their acts and proceedings while so holding over, done for and in the name of the corporation, designed to charge upon it any liability or obligation for the services of any such director, or any officer, or attorney or counsel appointed by them, and every such liability or obligation, must be held fraudulent and void.<sup>7</sup>

§ 38. Id.: How Far Binding on Strangers, Stockholders and Employees.—"It is idle to appeal to the by-laws of . . . [a corporation the business of which is in the hands of executive agents] as affecting contracts made with third persons in reliance upon the apparent authority of its executive agents."<sup>8</sup> "By-laws of business corporations are as to third persons private regulations binding as between the corporation and its members or third persons having knowledge of them, but of no force as limitations per se as to third persons of an authority, which, except for the by-law, would be construed as within the apparent scope of the agency."<sup>9</sup> A corporate by-law that no contract be made by the company, by any officer, unless authorized by resolution of its directorate does not limit the authority of a managing agent intrusted with the sale of its securities to make a contract verbally authorized by those controlling the corporation as an incident to such sale.<sup>10</sup> A corporation is bound by a contract in writing made for it by one who generally managed it, sold its manufactured goods, bought raw material for it to manufacture, had charge of its bank account, drew all its cheques, was its secretary and treasurer, owned two-thirds of its stock and was the only one of its three stockholders and directors who lived where it had its place of business, irrespective of a by-law providing a contract for the amount of the one in question should be signed by its president.<sup>11</sup> ". . . the by-laws of a corporation, made in pursuance of its special charter, or of the general laws under which it is organized, are binding on all members and others acquainted with the method of doing business . . . It is another rule, that every by-law made in pursuance of a general or incidental authority, must be a reasonable one. It is not a reasonable by-law, which, without authority express or to be clearly implied, interferes with the common rights of property and the dealings of third persons, and prevents the purchase and transfer or delivery of property.”<sup>12</sup> A by-law will not be set aside, certainly unless for extremely good cause, as being in subversion of the corporation’s charter and in subversion of and to the irreparable injury of stockholders, because it, in enumerating the powers of the general manager of the company, besides giving him customary powers, gives him general and exclusive charge of the business in all unspecified details and makes him executive officer of the board of trustees, provided it make him at all times subject to the board’s control.<sup>13</sup> A corporate by-law that none of the stock shall be allowed to be transferred on the books if the person in whose name it stands is indebted to the company unless upon consent of the board of trustees or president or treasurer has no warrant in the statutes and if not made known on the stock certificates cannot be upheld.<sup>14</sup> A by-law of a corporation cannot prevent one employed by its president to prepare a pamphlet setting forth the patent under which the company was organized to work from recovering against it for such services.<sup>15</sup>

§ 39. Id.: Inspection of.—While it is in the discretion of the court to grant an application of a stockholder to inspect his corporation’s by-laws just as much as its books and other papers, yet it must be a strong case which will warrant a denial of inspection of by-laws, because they are part of the contract between him and it, while the books and papers are not.<sup>16</sup> The general subject of the right of inspection of corporate books and records is treated hereinafter.<sup>17</sup>

§ 40. Id.: Amendment of.—“The power to make by-laws is to make such as are not inconsistent with the constitution and the law; and the power to alter has the same limit, so that no alteration could be made which would infringe a right already

§ 41. Id.: Seal, Governing Statutes.—Every corporation as such has power, though not specified in the law under which it is incorporated, to have a common seal and to alter it at pleasure.<sup>20</sup> A seal of a corporation may be impressed directly upon the instrument or writing to be sealed, or upon wafer, wax or other adhesive substance affixed thereto, or upon paper, or other similar substance affixed thereto by mucilage or other adhesive substance.<sup>1</sup> An instrument or writing duly executed, in the corporate name of a corporation, which has not adopted a corporate seal, by the proper officers of the corporation under their private seals, is deemed to have been executed under the corporate seal.<sup>2</sup>

Id.: In General.—“ . . . when the sale, assignment or transfer of the property of the corporation requires the use of the common seal, it cannot be made without the assent and authority of the board.”<sup>3</sup> “The seal of a corporation like the seal of an individual when affixed to a contract is presumptive evidence of a sufficient consideration for the contract.”<sup>4</sup> Assuming (what is gravely to be doubted) that the presence of the corporate seal upon instruments having the appearance of having been made as the company's negotiable promissory notes could affect their negotiability, yet its mere presence, unaccompanied by a single fact evidencing that the company's officers intended to, or did, affix it, is quite insufficient to have any effect upon their apparent character.<sup>5</sup>

§ 43. Id.: Adoption of.—The statutes governing the adoption by a corporation of a seal are set forth in the last section but one, and should be read in considering the present section. "A corporation, like an individual, may adopt any seal that is convenient for the particular occasion. The only limitation of the rule is, that the seal adopted must be affixed as the seal of the corporation (citations). Where . . . it is found that the contract recites that it is executed under the hands and seals of the parties, if one seal is affixed after the names of the parties, that will be sufficient proof that the particular seal was adopted by all those who sign under the recital, and the seal will be deemed to be the seal of all parties alike."<sup>6</sup> Adoption by the trustees of a religious corporation of a seal affixed opposite the name of its president signed to a mortgage is sufficient if it had no seal at the time.<sup>7</sup> When a prior president of a corporation withholds its corporate seal and stock book so as to prevent the transfer of stock thereon, and the issue of new stock in time to permit it to be voted upon at an annual meeting, it is lawful for the directors to adopt and procure a new seal and new stock book to accomplish that purpose and those holding stock of record in the new book may legally vote.<sup>8</sup>

§ 44. Id.: Affixation Presumed to be by Authority and to made Instrument Binding on Corporation.—"It is an ancient and well-established rule of law that where the seal of a corporation is affixed to a contract or written instrument, to which such corporation is a party, and it is signed by the president and secretary or other proper officers, it will be presumed that such officers did not exceed their powers, as the seal is prima facie proof that it was attached by proper authority, and it lies with the party objecting to its execution to show that it was affixed surreptitiously or improperly.”<sup>9</sup> “Although the presence of a seal upon an instrument is prima facie proof that it was attached by proper authority . . . it is only such proof as may be conclusively rebutted . . .”<sup>10</sup> “The seal of a corporation, affixed to an instrument, proves itself, and is of itself sufficient prima facie, or presumptive evidence, that it was so affixed by due authority. It lies with the party objecting to the instrument so sealed to show that the seal of the corporation was improperly affixed, or without the assent of the proper authority (citations). The officer taking proof of the deed is not required to take evidence that the corporate seal was affixed by authority, or to examine into the title of the person who assumes to be the officer of the corporation.”<sup>11</sup> A contract is presumed to be that of a corporation which is a party to it if signed by its president and secretary and if it had the corporate seal affixed; but this prima facie showing may be upset by the corporation’s demonstration that it was ultra vires, even though it does not affirmatively so allege in its answer, provided it generally denies.<sup>12</sup> A corporate seal affixed to a contract, within its lawful powers to make, by lawful authority is sufficient to bind it until impeached.<sup>13</sup> “A deed formally executed under the corporate seal, bears upon its face the presumption that it was executed by competent authority from the corporation.”<sup>14</sup>

§ 45. Books and Records: Adopting, Keeping and Compelling Delivery.—Every stock corporation must keep at its office (1) correct books of account of all its business and transactions, and (2) a book to be known as the stock book, containing (a) the names, alphabetically arranged, of all persons who are stockholders of the corporation, showing (b) their places of residence, (c) the number of shares of stock held by them respectively, (d) the time when they respectively became the owners thereof, and (e) the amount paid thereon.<sup>15</sup> The board of directors has power at a meeting lawfully convened to adopt a new stock book, as the adoption of a stock book in the first instance pertains to the duties of the directors

§ 46. Id.: Inspection, In General.—" . . . A stockholder has the right at common law to inspect the books of his corporation at a proper time and place, and for a proper purpose, and . . . if this right is refused by the officers in charge a writ of mandamus may issue, in the sound discretion of the court, with suitable safeguards to protect the interests of all concerned. It should not be issued to aid a blackmailer, nor withheld simply because the interest of the stockholder is small, but the court should proceed cautiously and discreetly, according to the facts of the particular case. To the extent, however, that an absolute right is conferred by statute, nothing is left to the discretion of the court, but the writ should issue as a matter of course, although even then, doubtless, due precautions may be taken as to time and place so as to prevent interruption of business, or other serious inconveniences"; but the statutory provision that a corporation shall keep a stock book which shall be open to the inspection of its stockholders does not abridge the common law rights of the stockholders to examine the corporate books, stock as well as other.<sup>20</sup> The distinction must be borne in mind between the general business books and the stock book of a corporation in determining a stockholder's right of inspection thereof; because the inspection of the former is a common-law right granted or withheld in the sound discretion of the court; and an inspection of the general books will be withheld unless the stockholder seek in good faith to learn something he has a right to know or if he seek it for the purpose of annoying the company; while the inspection of the stock book is an absolute right given by statute in addition to any common-law rights, and the stockholder's motives in inspecting the stock book alone are immaterial.<sup>1</sup> "The principle upon which a stockholder is allowed access to the books of a corporation is as applicable to the case of a banking corporation, as it is to any other kind of corporation. It is his common-law right, and, unless restricted by law or by the charter, the exercise of that right will not be denied him, at a proper time and place, when the circumstances are such as seem to the court to make that right available."<sup>2</sup> Two directors who control a corporation cannot prevent a third whom they have made secretary and a dummy director (to satisfy the demand of the statute that there be three) from inspecting the corporate books.<sup>3</sup> All that a director "need show to entitle himself to an inspection [of his corporation's books] is that he is a director of the company; that he has demanded permission to examine and that his demand has been refused."<sup>4</sup> While a director may examine his corporation's books assisted by a person designated by him and mandamus its officers to permit this, yet he cannot turn his right over to professional accountants acting alone.<sup>5</sup> A president has the right to inspect the books of his corporation, irrespective of his motive, and may have peremptory mandamus to command the corporation's secretary and treasurer, who refuses him such inspection, to permit it.<sup>6</sup> In order to entitle a stockholder to the aid of the court in securing an examination of the books of account of his corporation he should first show that he has demanded of its

But if the officer or agent having the custody of the specified book has removed the same from the company's office, and he cannot be found therein, during business hours, then a demand elsewhere would, in my opinion, be valid."<sup>20</sup>

§ 53. Id.: Practice In Enforcing, In General.—Inspection of corporate books in actions against corporations is treated in § 448 of this book. Nothing in the statute enabling inspection of a corporation's stock book under certain penalties impairs the power of the courts to compel by mandamus or judgment the production for examination by any stockholder of the stock books of a corporation.<sup>14</sup> While the right of a stockholder to inspect his corporation's books exists at common law irrespective of any such right granted by statute, the common law remedy will not be granted simply to enable the stockholder to determine if the company has been properly conducted.<sup>15</sup> The proceeding for discovery of papers of a corporation must be commenced by petition upon notice and is entirely distinct from that for taking depositions begun by summons in an action followed by affidavits and in which the corporation to be examined may be required to produce its books, not to be inspected by the other side as in a discovery proceeding, but to refresh the recollection of the corporate officer orally examined.<sup>16</sup>

§ 54. Id.: By Mandamus, As to Books In General.—A small stockholder is entitled to mandamus to compel his corporation to submit its books to his inspection when he has been such three years and since its formation, no report has ever been made by it, the president (a personal friend alleged to have induced the purchase of the stock) says that he has answered all "reasonable inquiries," that the corporation lost much money in a transaction of which the stockholder knew and that the latter has become hostile to him and is trying to make him buy the stock.<sup>17</sup> A director is entitled as matter of law to a peremptory writ of mandamus to compel his domestic corporation's president and treasurer to permit him and an accountant to examine its books for a period limited by the necessity of the case.<sup>18</sup> As a peremptory writ of mandamus issues only when the applicant's right to it depends upon questions of law and in every other case it cannot issue until after an alternative writ, one seeking only a peremptory writ to examine a corporation's books to find out the value of his stock, upon allegations that dividends were paid when he managed it whereas none are now paid, will be unsuccessful if the answering affidavits allege the reason for this to be that he is unjustly and unfairly and illegally competing with its business, because such answer is substantially admitted as true by his demand for a peremptory writ.<sup>19</sup>

§ 55. Id.: As to Stock Transfer Book.—The exercise of the power of the court in granting a mandamus to a stockholder to enable him to examine the transfer books of the corporation in which he holds stock for proper purposes and on proper occasions is discretionary, and will not be reviewed by the Court of Appeals when the intermediate appellate tribunal has held that such discretion has properly been exercised in refusing the writ.<sup>20</sup> The Court has discretion to mandamus a corporation to show its stock transfer book to a stockholder even though the application to the corporation by the stockholder for permission to inspect be not made within thirty days of an election.<sup>1</sup>

§ 56. Id.: Stockholder's Motive in Seeking.—When there is a strong and natural inference that the granting to one stockholder of a peremptory writ of mandamus to his corporation to allow him to inspect its books would be inimical to and destructive of the rights and interests of other stockholders and of the corporation, it would be an abuse of discretion to grant the writ.<sup>2</sup> Although there is no express provision of law authorizing a mandamus to compel a corporation, whether domestic or foreign, to let one of its stockholders inspect its books, yet it will be granted when he shows a legal right to such inspection; but the writ is in the court's judicial discretion and if the corporation states facts which justify an inference that the application is not made bona fide for the stockholder's purposes or protection but for the benefit of undisclosed persons for undisclosed purposes, the court should require the applicant frankly to state (by replying affidavit or before a referee) the purpose of the application and at whose instigation made.<sup>3</sup> "A stockholder has the right for a proper purpose and at a proper time and place to inspect the books of his corporation, and . . . if that right is denied him by the officers of the corporation, the Supreme Court may in its sound discretion issue a writ of mandamus to compel an inspection . . . An examination will not be allowed for an ulterior purpose or to embarrass the corporation."<sup>4</sup> Inspection of corporate books through the aid of the court's mandamus will be denied when the real object of the petitioner is to obtain information that will aid him in crippling the corporation's business for the benefit of its business rival.<sup>5</sup> " . . . The motives of a stockholder, however sinister, constitute no answer to an action by him to recover the penalty prescribed by statute for the refusal of a corporation to exhibit its stock book upon proper demand "; but "the right to a mandamus to compel compliance with the statute is not . . . specifically given by the written law " and the court will not aid a stockholder by mandamus if his designs are sinister, e. g., if he makes the application in the interest of a business rival of the corporation.<sup>6</sup> A corporation will be mandamusd to allow a stockholder to examine its books only in proper aid of his stock interest, and not to secure to him information to aid him in a suit against directors of the corporation for damages sustained by him because of a false report published by them inducing him to

§ 57. Id.: Pleading, Practice and Evidence.—"Statements or denials on information and belief, or which are unspecific and indefinite, are worthless in mandamus proceedings."<sup>10</sup> Before one claiming to be entitled to peremptory mandamus for inspection of a domestic corporation's books as one of its stockholders can succeed he must show that he is a stockholder of record on its books.<sup>11</sup> Peremptory mandamus for examination of a corporation's books will not lie simply on the affidavit of one who alleges he has power of attorney from a stockholder to examine such books.<sup>12</sup> "The rule is that before a relator is entitled [as a stockholder to a peremptory writ of mandamus directing his corporation to permit him to examine its books] . . . he must establish that the information desired has been refused by the corporation, after a demand made therefor, and that it was necessary for him to have the information in order to properly protect his interest in the corporation."<sup>13</sup> Before a stockholder may obtain the court's power to compel his corporation to open its books to his inspection he must establish that the information desired has been refused by it after demand and that he needs the information to protect his corporate interests.<sup>14</sup> In determining an application for a peremptory writ of mandamus to a corporation to allow a stockholder to inspect its books, the affidavits submitted by respondent must be taken as true.<sup>15</sup> "It is a settled rule of law that where in an application for a peremptory writ of mandamus the relators . . . proceed wholly on the papers presented, only undisputed statements of facts contained in the petition can be considered, and every other statement of fact contained in the answering papers must be assume[d] to be true."<sup>16</sup> Moving affidavits on an application for a mandamus to a corporation to show books to its stockholder pursuant to his common-law right of inspection should state his belief that transactions complained of resulted or likely will result in loss to the corporation or its stockholders.<sup>17</sup> A denial to a flat statement that one is a holder of stock of a corporation and has been refused permission to examine its stock transfer book is not sufficient to defeat his application if it be to the effect that the person making it, a director of the corporation, was advised by counsel and charged the fact to be that the applicant was not the owner or holder of shares although he held a certificate therefor—such possession being illegal.<sup>18</sup>

"The books of a corporation for many purposes are evidence, not only as between the corporation and its members, and between members, but also as between the corporation or its members and strangers. They are received in evidence generally to prove corporate acts of a corporation such as its incorporation, its list of stockholders, its by-laws, the formal proceedings of its board of directors and its financial condition when its solvency comes in question. But we have not been able . . . to find any case in which it has been decided that the books of account of a corporation are competent evidence, of themselves, to establish an account or claim against a trustee or stockholder in an action brought in behalf of the corporation."<sup>19</sup> The books of a corporation proven to have been kept by its treasurer, in his handwriting and he dead, are admissible in evidence as entries made in the usual course of business by one who had no interest to falsify.<sup>20</sup> The books of a corporation proven by its treasurer to have been kept by him and to contain correct entries of tolls as given by the toll-gatherer, coupled with proof by the latter that he had made correct report of tolls gathered by him, are admissible in evidence.<sup>1</sup> The books of a corporation proven by its treasurer to have been received by him as the company's books upon his accession to office are not admissible.<sup>2</sup> The books of account of a corporation relating to its own matters and management, such as its stock and minute books, may be per se evidence; but its ordinary books of account kept by it relating to its transactions with third parties are not per se evidence of an indebtedness against it in an action to charge its directors with liability for its debts by reason of failure to file an annual statement.<sup>3</sup>

§ 59. Id.: Stock Books.—The stock book of every stock corporation is presumptive evidence of the facts therein stated pursuant to statute in favor of the plaintiff in any action or proceeding against such corporation or any of its officers, directors or stockholders.<sup>4</sup> “There is nothing in any statute which makes the books of the company the incontrovertible evidence of ownership of stock. A person may be the absolute, legal and equitable owner of stock without any transfer appearing upon the books.”<sup>5</sup> “The books containing the lists of the stockholders are evidence of the ownership of the stock, and a corporation is justified in being governed thereby until proof or notice is given showing that other parties than those named therein are the owners of the stock.”<sup>6</sup> “As between himself and third parties, the person who appears upon the transfer books to be a stockholder, may have parted with all his interest in the stock, but as between himself and the corporation, such person, and he only, is treated as a stockholder.”<sup>7</sup> The statute making a corporation's stock book presumptive evidence of the facts therein stated in an action against its directors, and others, does not prevent common-law evidence to prove who are its stockholders if it does not keep such a book.<sup>8</sup> A stock certificate book is not a stock transfer book required by statute to be kept so as to be presumptive evidence of the facts therein stated as provided by such statute.<sup>9</sup> The appearance of one's name on a corporation's stock book is presumptive evidence that he is a stockholder and throws upon him the burden of proving that he is not.<sup>10</sup>

§ 60. Id.: Resolutions, Deeds and Records.—"The acts of corporations may be proved in the same way as the acts of individuals. If there be no record evidence, they may be proved by the testimony of witnesses; and even where no direct evidence of such acts can be given, facts and circumstances may be proved from which the acts may be inferred."<sup>11</sup> When the whole agreement between a corporation and individuals is not in writing, though partly in a corporate resolution, it is proper to admit parol evidence of the agreement.<sup>12</sup> Entries in the minute books of a corporation which come from the place where such books are deposited and bear all the evidence of genuineness are competent evidence to show possession of realty if the minutes refer to things which were done at the time the entries were made and are ancient.<sup>13</sup> No law requires the keeping of minutes by a private corporation, or, if kept, their signature and attestation by any officer; and, if it be shown that a book is an original corporate minute book, used in the corporation's business, handed down to its officers, minutes therein in the handwriting of one who was its secretary and which state that such one acted as secretary of the meeting, should be admitted as evidence of what they state, even though unsigned.<sup>14</sup> Corporate records, properly proven, are evidence of corporate action, but not of the truth of recitals therein as to the value of its property and so of its stock which are taken from the report of an expert spread on the corporate minutes.<sup>15</sup> When a corporate resolution desired to be gotten in evidence is in writing it should be produced; and not sought to be proven in substance by oral testimony.<sup>16</sup> The entry of a resolution of a board of directors in the minute book under direction of the corporation's secretary and its signature by him are sufficient acts to permit the reading of the resolution in evidence.<sup>17</sup> As directors control a corporation, their resolution providing for the employment and compensation of a person is evidence thereof — whether by way of original employment or ratification of the act of the president.<sup>18</sup> The formal act of a corporation recorded in a resolution of its board of directors cannot be limited, modified or annulled by oral proof in contradiction of its terms, not directed to mistake or to fraud in the record of the resolution.<sup>19</sup> A resolution of corporate directors to increase the capital stock of their corporation when it is already issued to the full authorized amount will be construed to mean the sale of some of such stock which has been surrendered to the company after first having been duly issued.<sup>20</sup> A corporate board of directors' resolution offering stock at a stated price is not repealed by a second resolution not referring to the first which provides for issue of its bonds to retire notes held by its stockholders.<sup>1</sup> A deed over thirty years old purporting to be executed by a corporation, with a concluding clause stating its treasurer by order of its board of directors thereto affixed its common seal and his signature as treasurer, subscribed by him and witnessed, and by him acknowledged in the usual manner of the acknowledgment of a deed executed by an individual, is properly received in evidence, and imports a grant by the corporation as distinguished from the act and seal of the individual officer, though it may be that it is necessary to prove that the seal was that of the corporation and the individual was its treasurer.<sup>2</sup> An admission that a corporate resolution was "duly adopted" precludes any contention that it was invalid because the vote of one relying thereon was necessary as director to its adoption.<sup>3</sup> The books of a corporation are

§ 61. Stock: Definitions, Distinctions and Nature of.—"The word stock has various significations, but, as applied to a joint stock association or corporation, it means the property and franchises of the corporation. It is sometimes used to designate the certificate, or scrip, issued to the stockholders; but this is an inappropriate use of the word. The scrip is not stock. The moment a corporation has either franchises or property of any kind it has stock; and the distributive share of its members respectively, in this stock, will depend upon the terms of its charter or articles of association."<sup>1</sup> "Shares of stock are in the nature of choses in action, and give the holder a fixed right in the division of the profits or earnings of a company so long as it exists, and of its effects when it is dissolved."<sup>2</sup> "A share of corporate stock is the right which the shareholder has to participate according to the number of shares in the surplus profits of the corporation on a division, and in the assets or capital stock remaining after payment of its debts on its dissolution or the termination of its active existence and operation (citations). It is created by the joint action of the corporation and the shareholder. It imports a contribution to the capital stock made by the shareholder and accepted by the corporation. When a corporation has agreed that a person shall be entitled to a certain number of shares for a consideration permitted by law and executed by the person, those shares come into existence and are owned by him. The statement in the certificate of incorporation or charter of the corporation that the capital stock is a designated amount divided into a certain number of shares, each of a named value, creates neither shares nor capital stock. It expresses the power of the corporation to acquire a capital stock. It creates potential shares which, transferred into actual shares by the acquisition of members and their payments, produce the money or property which, put into a single corporate fund, is the actual capital or capital stock on which the corporate business is undertaken and in which are the shares. It also fixes the sum of the payment necessary to create a share. The certificate of the corporation for the shares, or the stock certificate, is not necessary to the existence of the shares or their ownership. It is merely the written evidence of those facts. It expresses the contract between the shareholder and the corporation and his co-shareholders. But it is the payment, or the obligation to pay for shares of stock, accepted by the corporation, that creates both the shares and their ownership.”<sup>3</sup> “The words ‘cash capital $150,000,’ do not necessarily import that the capital of the company was all paid in, or that it was intact, or that the stock was worth par. The terms ‘cash capital’ are sometimes used to signify the nominal capital, and their meaning is at least equivocal.”<sup>4</sup> A certificate of stock is the subject of conversion and by that corporation which issued it.<sup>5</sup>

§ 62. Id.: Classes, Kinds and Rights of, In General.—Every domestic stock corporation may issue preferred stock and common stock and different classes of preferred stock: (1) by the unanimous consent of the stockholders expressed in writing and filed in the office of the Secretary of State and in the office of the clerk of the county in which the principal business office of the corporation is located; or (2) by the consent of the holders of record of two-thirds of the capital stock, given at a meeting called for that purpose upon notice such as is required for the annual meeting of the corporation.<sup>6</sup> A certificate of the proceedings of such meeting, signed and sworn to by the president or a vice-president and by the secretary or assistant secretary of the corporation, must be filed and recorded in the offices where the original certificate of incorporation of such corporation was filed and recorded.<sup>7</sup> A corporation may issue stock with par value, whether common or preferred, and stock, other than preferred stock having a preference as to principal, without any nominal or par value.<sup>8</sup> "There is nothing in the constitution or the law that inhibits a corporation from beginning its corporate action by classifying the shares in its capital stock, with peculiar privileges to one share over another, and thus offering its stock to the public for subscriptions thereto. No rights are got until a subscription is made."<sup>9</sup>

§ 63. Id.: Changing Classification of Issued Stock.—But when it comes to changing the classification of stock which has been already issued, the rule is more strict. "The right of every shareholder to his proportion of the profits of the corporation . . . [is] vested, and in the absence of some power to change the relative value of the shares conferred by statute or by the articles of association, no change . . . [can] be made without the consent of all the shareholders," such e. g., as giving certain shares priority over the rest.<sup>11</sup> Once a by-law is adopted dividing corporate capital stock into shares equal in amount, each share issued pursuant thereto is equal in value and in right; and the rights of the holders cannot be diverted without their consent.<sup>12</sup> " . . . any action of a corporation which takes hold of the shares of its capital stock already sold and in the hands of lawful owners, and divides them into two classes — one of which is thereby given prior right to a receipt of a fixed sum from the earnings before the other may have any receipt therefrom, and is given an equal share afterwards with the

§ 64. Id.: Preferred Stock.—Every domestic stock corporation may issue preferred stock and different classes of preferred stock.<sup>14</sup> But it cannot issue preferred stock without any nominal or par value with a preference as to principal.<sup>15</sup> "The permission to issue preferred stock is practically allowing the stockholders to divide the profits of the business in such manner as they may see fit. It is the usual practice to allow a certain dividend on the preferred stock, the holder having no right to vote; also to defer payment of dividend on the common stock until the claims of the preferred shareholders are satisfied. It is assumed, as a matter of course, that the total amount of stock, preferred and common, represents an actual contribution of capital paid in either in money or in property at a legal valuation."<sup>16</sup> The Legislature may prescribe what conditions may be attached to preferred stock issued by a corporation, but, if it do not specify any conditions, the corporation may attach them, so that they become a contract between it and those who acquire the stock.<sup>17</sup> Although a stock certificate itself gives no preference and a written guaranty thereon only authorizes the dividend described therein, yet the whole proceeding relating to the issue of the stock may be taken into consideration as constituting one and an entire transaction in order to show the preference claimed.<sup>18</sup> An owner by assignment of common stock is as much bound by an agreement by his assignor as to the preference to be given the holders of preferred stock as would be his assignor.<sup>19</sup> A holder of preferred or guaranteed stock entitled to cumulative dividends does not deprive himself of the right to have net earnings applied to payment of such dividends by alleged acquiescence in their distribution among general stockholders, if he protested against such disposition of net earnings and demanded his dividends on his preferred or guaranteed stock.<sup>20</sup> One who is found to have been entitled to have the net earnings of a corporation applied to accumulated dividends due on his preferred or guaranteed stock instead of to dividends on general stock is entitled to interest on the dividends he was entitled to receive from the time the net earnings were appropriated to the holders of the common stock.<sup>1</sup> No essential difference exists between preferred stock, having priority over the remaining stock in the payment of dividends, and stock to which that preference is guaranteed; in the one case the agreement to preserve the preference and pay the dividend before dividends may be paid on the common stock, is to be clearly implied, while in the other it is explicitly expressed.<sup>2</sup> A corporation may make such arrangement with its stockholders as they please as to the rights of preferred stockholders and if the agreement is that the preferred stock is "to bear interest at the rate of six per centum per annum, payable semi-annually, cumulative," the dividends when declared would be only of interest earned, and if a person take some of a new issue on October 1 of preferred stock on the same terms and with the same rights as the old issued June 13, he should get such interest on the new, only, as will equalize it with the old, i. e., only from October 1 and not from July 1.<sup>3</sup> Holders of certificates of guaranteed corporate stock, which entitle them "to dividends at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, . . . out of the net earnings of said company, and . . . to share pro rata with the other stock of the company, in any excess of earnings over ten per cent. per annum," are entitled, if the corporation fail, for want of net earnings, to make the dividends on the days set, to have dividends paid when the net earnings necessary for that purpose should afterward be realized.<sup>4</sup> One holding stock of a corporation represented by a certificate having printed on it a copy of a guaranty by another corporation of a certain rate of dividends by the former, provided for in a lease between the two corporations, cannot on surrender of the certificate require the new certificate to contain a like guaranty if his corporation's directors have in good faith changed the guarantor corporation's liability to a smaller rate; because the lease is between the corporations and not their stockholders.<sup>5</sup> Evidence may be introduced to show that the actual agreement as to the preference to be given stock the certificates for which provide for a preference as to dividends only was that the preference should be not only as to the dividends but also on the distribution of assets.<sup>6</sup> An agreement made on consolidation of two corporations into one that a person receiving some of the capital stock shall so long as he hold stock be paid a stated interest on its par value does not entitle him to the issue of stock preferred according to the agreement.<sup>7</sup>

§ 66. Capital Stock: Definitions, Distinctions and Nature.—The distinction between the capital stock of a corporation and the shares of that stock should be well understood: "A corporation cannot issue and deliver a share of its capital stock. By the joint action of the corporation and the subscriber for its stock, he may become the owner of a given number of shares thereof, but not in such sense as that he may take away those shares out of the common corporate fund. The capital stock, is that money or property, which is put into a single corporate fund, by those, who by subscription therefor, become members of the corporate body. That fund becomes the property of the aggregate body only. A share of the capital stock, is the right to partake, according to the amount put into the fund, of the surplus profits of the corporation, and ultimately on the dissolution of it, of so much of the fund thus created, as remains unimpaired, and is not liable for debts of the corporation. . . . But such a right, that is, such a share, cannot be issued and delivered by a corporation, continuing in legal existence, and carrying on the business for which it was formed. . . . Those shares are intangible, and rest in abstract legal contemplation. . . . What the corporation can do, and what in some circumstances it is compellable to do, is to issue and deliver, the written evidence, of the existence of such shares, and of the ownership of them; a paper usually called a stock certificate.”<sup>9</sup> “The capital of a corporation consists of its funds, securities, credits and property of whatever kind which it possesses. The word ‘capital’ applied to corporations is often used interchangeably with the words ‘capital stock,’ and both are frequently used to express the same thing—the property and assets of the corporation. Strictly, the capital stock of a corporation is the money contributed by the corporators to the capital, and is usually represented by shares issued to subscribers to the stock on the initiation of the corporate enterprise.”<sup>10</sup> “When a corporation is organized it secures capital by the issue of shares of capital stock. The fund or property thus secured answers the twofold purpose of furnishing means for carrying on the operations of the corporation and also security for the payment of creditors. This capital stock is carried as a liability and universally, so far as I am aware, at its par amount. It is thus carried as a liability because this is the proper bookkeeping entry. But aside from this, such entry also serves to emphasize the duty of the corporation to keep its capital stock unimpaired for the protection of those dealing with it. If the operations of the corporation result in gains, such gains are carried to the credit, not of the capital stock account but of some other account as surplus or profit and loss. Of course they may be capitalized by the issue of stock against them and sometimes in the case of certain corporations like banks or insurance corporations where a certain ratio between assets and liabilities other than to capital stock is required, such surplus or profits may be counted and maintained as capital although not formally capitalized. In the absence of some such special consideration I think we may take notice that it is the ordinary rule of corporate management established by decisions, statutes and business usages that the surplus of these gains or profits beyond what may be necessary to keep good the liability to capital stock which has been issued, may, in the discretion of a board of directors, be distributed amongst its stockholders as dividends and returns on their investment.”<sup>11</sup> “That which constitutes the capital stock of a corporation belongs to all of its stockholders, proportionately to their

It is divided into shares and each share represents the holder's proportionate interest."<sup>12</sup> "By loss or misfortune, or misconduct of the managing officers of a corporation, its capital stock may be reduced below the amount limited by its charter; but whatever property it has up to that limit must be regarded as its capital stock. When its property exceeds that limit, then the excess is surplus. Such surplus belongs to the corporation and is a portion of its property, and, in a general sense, may be regarded as a portion of its capital, but in a strictly legal sense it is not a portion of its capital, and is always regarded as surplus profits."<sup>13</sup>

§ 67. Id.: Is a Trust Fund for Creditors.— "It is the established law of this State that the capital of a corporation is regarded as a substitute for the personal liability which subsists in private ownerships and as a fund set apart and pledged for the payment of its debts. While a corporation is continuing its business, seeking credit and incurring liabilities, or while, after it has ceased to do business, it has outstanding liabilities, its directors or stockholders cannot lawfully and with immunity from personal liability to the corporation reduce the capital, which is the product of its capital stock as certified in its incorporating certificate, by appropriating or squandering it or giving it away."<sup>14</sup> "The proposition is well settled, that the stock and property of every corporation is to be regarded as a trust fund for the payment of its debts; and its creditors have a lien upon it, and the right to priority of payment over any stockholder. It may be followed into the hands of its directors; and even when it has been divided among its stockholders before its debts are paid, a judgment-creditor may pursue it, after the return of an execution unsatisfied, and maintain an action in the nature of a creditor's bill against a stockholder, to reach whatever was so received by him."<sup>15</sup> The law's policy is to maintain unimpaired a business corporation's capital stock as a fund to which its creditors may look and not to allow the corporation to pur-

The trust is implied, and arises from what are called equitable liens, being liens which exist in equity, and of which courts of equity alone take cognizance (citation). Upon the dissolution of such corporation, the creditors may pursue the property and enforce their claims, unless it has passed into the hands of bona fide purchasers; for the property is deemed to be held in trust, first, for the payment of the debts of the corporation; and second, for the benefit of the stockholders, in proportion to their respective interests."<sup>17</sup> "The assets of a corporation are a trust fund for the payment of its debts upon which the creditors have an equitable lien both as against the stockholders and all transferees, except those purchasing in good faith and for value;" and if, during the pendency of an action against a corporation, all its assets are transferred to another so that on rendition of judgment it cannot be satisfied the creditor may have judgment of sequestration and the appointment of a receiver.<sup>18</sup> The bona fide creditors of a corporation, organized, and the business of which is carried on by an individual in its name, to defraud his creditors, have no right to property held by him in the corporation's name superior to that of a defrauded creditor of the individual, because of the mere fact that the corporation was regularly organized.<sup>19</sup>

If default is made in the payment of any installment as required by such resolution the board may declare the stock and all previous payments thereon forfeited for the use of the corporation after the expiration of sixty days from the service on the defaulting stockholder, personally, or by mail directed to him at his last known post-office address, of a written notice requiring him to make payment within sixty days from the service of the notice at a place specified therein, and stating that in case of failure to do so his stock and all previous payments thereon will be forfeited for the use of the corporation. § 70. Id.: When Subscription is in Certificate of Incorporation.—A subscription in a certificate of incorporation, sufficient in form and substance, takes effect simultaneously with the filing of the certificate.<sup>13</sup> A certificate of incorporation when filed becomes binding on the subscribers, and their liability is fixed by their subscriptions without the formal issuance of stock to them.<sup>14</sup> One signing an agreement, with others, to form a corporation, which designates the number of shares to be subscribed for by each, and subsequently signing and acknowledging a certificate of incorporation of the company, is liable to the corporation or its receiver for his subscription.<sup>15</sup> A subscription to stock of a corporation is binding though it consist but of a signing of the certificate whereby it was created and the placing opposite the signature of the number of shares taken.<sup>16</sup>

§ 71. Id.: When Subscription is in Separate Agreement.—A sufficient consideration to hold a subscriber for stock to his subscription agreement results from the corporation's obligation to issue the stock, his consequent control over the corporation to the extent of his holdings, the request implied in his signing that the corporation proceed with its powers under the charter and the detriment to it through having done so.<sup>17</sup> While a subscription by one to corporate stock before the complete formation of the corporation is not valid and binding because there is no party with whom the subscriber could then contract, yet he becomes a stockholder liable to pay the full amount of his subscription if, after the corporation is formed, it accepts the subscription and recognizes the subscriber as a stockholder and he does, too, by paying calls on his subscription.<sup>18</sup> One is bound to fulfill his

§ 72. Id.: When Ten Per Cent Payment Necessary.—The certificate of incorporation must state the number of shares of stock which each subscriber agrees to take; and if the whole capital stock is not subscribed at the time the certificate is filed the directors named therein may open subscription books to fill up the capital stock and continue to receive subscriptions until the whole capital stock is subscribed, and at the time of subscribing every subscriber whose subscription is payable in money must pay the directors ten per centum upon the amount subscribed by him in cash and no such subscription must be received or taken without such payment.<sup>4</sup> It is not necessary that ten per cent of an original subscription to stock of a corporation, made for the purpose of its organization, should be paid, to bind the subscriber.<sup>5</sup> Payment of ten per cent of subscriptions to corporate capital stock is required only of those who subscribe after the organization of the corporation.<sup>6</sup> A subscription to corporate stock after the incorporation of the company is void unless ten per cent thereof is paid in cash; but as to original subscriptions before incorporation, the necessity of such percentage payment is dubious.<sup>7</sup> One subscribing to capital stock of a corporation after its incorporation but not paying ten per cent of his subscription in cash as required by statute is not bound by his contract.<sup>8</sup> A contract of cash subscription to corporate capital stock made after incorporation, which has been assigned as collateral security for a loan made upon the faith thereof, is no more enforceable in the hands of the assignee if ten per cent thereof has not been paid when the contract was made than

Id.: When No Call Necessary.—No call or demand for payment of subscriptions to capital is necessary when by its certificate of incorporation, to which the subscribers were parties, it was to commence business with the full amount of capital stock paid in, and when it had commenced business, continued it till bankrupt and has ceased to do business.<sup>16</sup> One subscribing to stock of a corporation under an agreement to pay therefor when the board of directors by resolution might require, without stipulating for notification to him of the resolution, is bound to pay if the resolution be passed, though he have no notice thereof.<sup>17</sup> A stock subscription may be held due, notwithstanding there be no allegation that it has been called by the board of directors, on the theory that the subscription is to be deemed payable on demand.<sup>18</sup>

§ 75. Id.: After Transfer of Stock.—No share of stock is transferable until all previous calls thereon have been fully paid in.<sup>19</sup> One transferring in a valid, bona fide and effectual manner to another shares of corporate stock held by him, is not liable for calls made after the transfer.<sup>20</sup> It would seem "that where the subscriber, after receiving his shares, made transferable upon the books of the corporation by the terms of the certificate, makes such transfer in good faith, and the company accepts a surrender of his certificate, and issues a new one to the transferee and credits him with the stock upon its books, the transaction amounts to a consent by the company to a release of the old stockholder from liability for future calls, and a substitution of the liability of the transferee," but if the company understood that the old stockholder transferred his stock and resigned as director on condition of the substitution of the new stockholder, as liable in such capacity, there can be no question of the former's release.<sup>1</sup> Although a transfer by a stockholder of his stock before fully paid at par might have been held void as fraudulent, yet this cannot be done, as between it and the corporation, when the corporation ratified the transfer by canceling his certificate and issuing a new one to the purchaser and suing the latter as a stockholder to recover the amount of a call.<sup>2</sup> A transferee on the company's books from an original subscriber to corporate stock who signs a receipt for the certificate therefor on the stock certificate stub showing a portion unpaid thereon at the time of its original issue, who has paid some calls on the stock and was duly notified of others duly made but unpaid, is impliedly liable, independent of any statute, to pay the calls on the stock transferred to him.<sup>3</sup>

§ 76. Id.: Defenses Against Liability On.—The courts of this State will not enforce a liability against one of its citizens for calls made on stock held by him when it is illegal, unequal and oppressive.<sup>4</sup> In an action against a stockholder to recover for a call made upon his stock, it is a defense that the call was illegal, unwarranted and made without authority.<sup>5</sup> Under the "well settled principle, that where money is paid by one of two parties to the other on an illegal contract, in a case where they may be considered as particeps criminis, and in pari delicto, an action cannot be maintained after the contract is executed to recover the money back again, for in pari delicto potior est conditio defendantis," one who consented and acted in all steps taken to increase a corporation's capital stock illegally cannot sue to recover on account of his subscription to such increase, part of which he has paid.<sup>6</sup> " . . . prima facie subscribers to the stock of a corporation are not bound to pay assessments upon their stock unless the whole capital of the company has been subscribed for. . . ." payments thereon forfeited for the use of the corporation after the expiration of sixty days from the service on the defaulting stockholder, personally, or by mail directed to him at his last known postoffice address, of a written notice requiring him to make payment within sixty days from the service of the notice at a place specified therein, and stating that in case of failure to do so his stock and all previous payments thereon will be forfeited for the use of the corporation.<sup>9</sup> In order to forfeit stock in a corporation all steps must be pursued exactly as prescribed by statute; so that if the notice to the subscriber of intended forfeiture is not determined upon by the board of directors but by persons assembled as such but not being a quorum thereof (though of the executive committee), the forfeiture cannot be enforced.<sup>10</sup> A corporation which has exercised its charter right to forfeit a subscriber's shares for failure to pay a call thereon is barred from any further claim against him upon his contract to take stock.<sup>11</sup>

§ 78. Id.: Secret Profit to Subscriber.—A secret agreement between a corporation and a subscriber to its stock by which the latter seeks to escape his statutory liability for payment of his subscription is against public policy and will not be upheld against creditors.<sup>12</sup> One subscribing to half the stock of a corporation, acting as a director and the president thereof, keeping no stock book, and assigning his stock while it was to his knowledge insolvent, cannot profit by a secret agreement with it whereby he is relieved from paying his stock subscription.<sup>13</sup> One subscribing to corporate stock enters into a joint undertaking with the other persons who at the same or a later time become subscribers which makes it illegal for him secretly to agree with one to whom some of the corporate stock is issued in payment of a business conducted by him and turned over to the corporation to accept some of the latter's stock as a condition to his own subscription; and such an agreement cannot be enforced.<sup>14</sup> No action lies by stockholders of a corporation to recover from a firm a "secret profit" made by it under a "stock subscription" if the latter be simply a contract between its subscribers and the firm, which has been fulfilled, to buy from the firm the number of shares subscribed in a company to be organized as the corporation, as there is no interest shown in the corporation in such contract; and the fact that the firm had done some things which by the contract it agreed itself to do or to procure to be done makes no difference.<sup>15</sup>

§ 79. Id.: Unpaid, Are Trust Fund for Creditors.—Every holder of capital stock not fully paid in any stock corporation is personally liable to its creditors to an amount equal to the amount unpaid on the stock held by him for debts of the corporation contracted while such stock was held by him.<sup>16</sup> The peculiar vigor of the doctrine that a corporation's capital stock is a trust fund for the security of creditors and that a liability in their favor to the extent of the unpaid part of the nominal value of the actual shares exists and can be enforced is "that contrary to the common law of England it secures to the creditors of insolvent corporations or their representatives the right of enforcing subscriptions for shares of which the corporation has deprived itself by release or defeasance. It declares that the capital or capital stock of a corporation is a substitute for the personal liability which subsists in individual or partnership undertakings and is a fund set apart as a security for the payment of the corporate debts. The capital or capital stock which it thus segregates is not the capital stock authorized or named in the charter of the corporation. If it were the members would be bound by the doctrine to contribute on account of it the sum within its named value needed to pay the debts of the insolvent corporation and voted for the proposition to issue the stock (part of which he got under the agreement) to the individual whose business the corporation bought out.

"As to existing corporations the liability imposed by this section shall be in lieu of the liability imposed upon stockholders of any existing corporation, under any general or special law . . . on account of any indebtedness hereafter contracted or any stock hereafter issued; but nothing in this section contained shall create or increase any liability of stockholders of any existing corporation under any general or special law."

tion. The statement in the charter does not create a security for the creditors. It creates authorized or potential capital stock and shares which, transferred into actual shares through the acquisition of subscribing members and their payments, produces the money or property which, put into a single corporate fund, is the actual capital or capital stock on which the business is undertaken and the assets or fund contemplated by the trust fund doctrine which the directors or stockholders may not lawfully diminish by appropriating or squandering it or giving it away. And as there is not a fund or security in the nominal or potential shares, there is none in the excess of the nominal value over the subscribed value of the shares. The subscription agreements, as they are enforceable through their express provisions or implication or statutory conditions, are the sources and the measure of the duty of the subscribers (citations). The doctrine further declares that unpaid subscriptions are a part of the capital and that a subscriber cannot be discharged to the injury of creditors by arrangement or device to which the creditors do not give their assent and by which he is to pay less than his subscription (citations). The doctrine does not create or nullify subscriptions. It lays hold of the assets of an insolvent corporation, and in doing that it compels subscribers to fulfill their legal obligations and perform their legal duties; but it does not beget those duties or obligations; it does not make unlawful or invalid a subscription which, apart from it, was valid and lawful. The question with it is, has the subscriber fully performed the subscription agreement as it in fact and in law exists, and an affirmative finding renders it inapplicable and inoperative.”<sup>17</sup> “It may be admitted that the liability of subscribers on unpaid stock subscriptions constitute an asset of the corporation, which cannot be surrendered or given up by the corporation without consideration to the prejudice of creditors. . . . The unissued shares of a corporation are not assets. When issued they represent a proportionate interest in the shareholder in the corporate property—an interest, however, subordinate to the claims of creditors.”<sup>18</sup> Unpaid subscriptions to a corporation’s capital stock are debts belonging to the corporation, so that its trustee in bankruptcy may sue therefor.<sup>19</sup>

§ 80. Id.: Payment for Stock or Subscriptions, Governing Statutes.—No corporation can issue stocks except for money, labor done or property actually received for the use and lawful purposes of such corporation; but any corporation may purchase any property authorized by its certificate of incorporation, or necessary for the use and lawful purposes of such corporation, and may issue stock to the amount of the value thereof in payment therefor, and the stock so issued is full paid stock and not liable to any further call, nor is the holder thereof liable to any further payment under the provisions of the statute, and in the absence of fraud in the transaction the judgment of the directors as to the value of the property purchased is conclusive.<sup>20</sup>

§ 81. Id.: The Person Liable.—The subject of the liability of subscribers to corporate stock to calls has been already discussed.<sup>1</sup> The person liable for an amount remaining due on shares of corporate stock is the one in whose name such shares stand in the certificate and on the corporation's books, irrespective of whether or not such one claims to be a trustee or to have assigned his holdings or to have executed a power of attorney to transfer the holdings.<sup>2</sup> A corporation cannot in an action at law against one who was a subscriber to its stock hold him for the unpaid amount due on his subscription if it has transferred such stock to another on the defendant's endorsement of the certificates issued to him therefor and issued new certificates to the transferee, and prosecuted to judgment (which it had satisfied without any payment having been made thereon) its like claim against the transferee.<sup>3</sup> A corporation cannot hold liable for the amount unpaid on a subscription to its stock, marked on the certificates "assessable," a purchaser thereof from the subscriber, if the latter made no formal subscription therefor, the former executed no formal written promise to pay therefor, and the circumstances show reliance by the purchaser upon statements by his vendor and the officers of the company that the stock was fully paid.<sup>4</sup> The signature by one to an agreement, preliminary to a corporation's organization, for the formation of a joint stock or corporate company for specified purposes, does not make him a stockholder in a corporation thereafter formed pursuant to statute or bind him to take and pay for stock therein.<sup>5</sup> The fact that one person, using his own name, subscribes to corporate stock for the benefit of another, who pays the installments and is recognized by the company as the owner thereof and is issued the certificate therefor, gives the former no right to insist that he should be considered the owner.<sup>6</sup> "To hold a subscriber to the capital stock of an unsuccessful company liable over to a purchaser upon a public subscription [of its stock], it seems necessary that there should be fraud, misrepresentation or deceit personally brought home to and chargeable upon him."<sup>7</sup> One signing an agreement to subscribe to corporate stock twice, once with his name simply and the second time with his name adding the word "Exr." may be sued in two different actions, one on each signature, even though the latter signature as well as the former bound him individually.<sup>8</sup> The representative of one who has paid but part of his subscription to corporate stock and who has plead successfully to a suit by the corporation to recover the balance of the subscription the Statute of Limitations cannot succeed in having issued to him a certificate for stock equivalent to the whole subscription, as his success in pleading the statute did not make him any the less indebted for the unpaid part of his subscription though it prevented recovery thereof by the corporation.<sup>9</sup> One buying unpaid subscriptions to stock of a corporation on sale thereof by a receiver appointed in proceedings to sequester its property is protected against a claim by a mortgagee of all the corporation's property who acquired title to the property mortgaged under a foreclosure sale thereof that he must pay such subscriptions.<sup>10</sup> A receiver of a corporation which had sold some of its stock outright to an individual cannot hold one who had made a subscription thereto to such individual for a balance claimed to be due on such subscription.<sup>11</sup> A bona fide buyer of corporate stock as

§ 82. Id.: Extent of Liability.—The binding character of subscriptions to corporate stock has been heretofore considered;<sup>14</sup> as well as liability on calls.<sup>15</sup> Stock issued to the amount of the value of property which a corporation is authorized by its certificate of incorporation to purchase or which is necessary for its use and lawful purposes is full paid and not liable to any further call, nor is the holder thereof liable for any further payment under the statute.<sup>16</sup> Every holder of capital stock not fully paid in any stock corporation is personally liable to its creditors to an amount equal to the amount unpaid on the stock held by him for debts of the corporation contracted while such stock was held by him.<sup>17</sup> The only obligation assumed by any subscriber to an agreement to take stock in a corporation to be formed to the others, or any of them, is to pay the sum subscribed; and the expression in the agreement of a desire to establish a certain institution does not make any subscriber liable for indebtedness incurred by the others to secure such establishment.<sup>18</sup> In the absence of some governing statutory provision a stockholder cannot be held liable for the difference between the nominal or par value of stock to which he has subscribed and the amount paid by him therefor less than such nominal or par value, if by express contract between himself and the corporation it was agreed that he should pay no more than he did pay.<sup>19</sup> A mere subscriber for the stock of a business corporation does not assume a liability to pay the full par value thereof after its transfer, unless there be some agreement making him so liable.<sup>20</sup> When some of subscribers to stock of a corporation, all of whom had agreed to pay their subscriptions to a lender of money to the corporation on its note, when it matured, to be applied to its payment, pay the lender after verdict had by the lender against themselves and the rest of the subscribers, they may hold such rest for contribution.<sup>1</sup>

§ 83. Id.: Defenses Against Liability, In General.—A corporation is not prevented from obtaining and compelling payment of subscriptions to its capital stock because it has not filed its certificate of incorporation with the county clerk and Secretary of State.<sup>2</sup> One cannot avoid his subscription to corporate stock because of a change in the line of the road of the company which does not injure him.<sup>3</sup> In an action to hold one to his unpaid subscription to capital stock of a corporation on his unconditional written agreement to subscribe, it is competent for him to show verbally the conditions upon which the subscription was made if they were part of an original, complete agreement of which but a part was reduced to writing in the subscription agreement.<sup>4</sup> If a corporation's certificate of incorporation expresses no illegal purpose, the fact that subsequent to the incorporation there were corporate acts showing a purpose to form and create a monopoly but not showing any adoption of an illegal scheme therefor planned before the incorporation by promoters, a stockholder cannot claim that his subscription to the capital stock was tainted with the alleged illegal character of the incorporation so to absolve him from payments thereon.<sup>5</sup> A subscriber to capital stock of a corporation "cannot rely upon a mere prospectus or on the representations of promoters to defeat his liability [to pay his subscription in full] unless such prospectus or representations have, after the incorporation, been adopted by the corporation and the business conducted in accordance therewith."<sup>6</sup> One subscribing to stock of a corporation upon the false and material representations of a promoter for it may rescind his subscription and recover what installments he has paid, even though the promoter had no authority to make the representations, if the corporation retained the benefit thereof.<sup>7</sup> The extent to which promoters may bind the corporation resulting from their promotion has been heretofore discussed.<sup>8</sup>

§ 84. Id.: Change in Charter or Name.—" . . . no mere addition to or alteration of the charter, however great, would operate to discharge a stockholder from his obligation to the corporation " to fulfill his subscription to its stock; " to work such a discharge the charter must be repealed, or the legislation must be such as virtually to subvert the corporation itself; or, at least, destroy its identity."<sup>9</sup> One subscribing to stock of a corporation incorporated under a charter making the charter subject to a law, permitting its alteration, supervision and repeal at the Legislature's discretion, is not discharged from liability on his subscription by an amendment by the Legislature giving the corporation five instead of two years within which to commence its work, as this is not an organic change.<sup>10</sup> One subscribing to the capital stock of a corporation to be formed under a certain name which is later refused it by the Secretary of State because of its similarity to the name of another corporation is not relieved from liability on his subscription because of the adoption of another name if the purpose of the corporation is carried out and no prejudice results to him from the change.<sup>11</sup>

§ 85. Id.: Defective Corporate Existence.—A subscriber cannot defend his liability upon his subscription to corporate stock on the ground that the articles of association were defective if he and his associates formed the corporation by their acts, it has assumed to exercise its corporate powers and has received recognition by the Legislature as a corporation.<sup>12</sup> One sued on his subscription to stock of a corporation cannot raise the point that it was not properly organized if he was one of its original incorporators and directors, took part in all done by way of incorporation and also in conducting its business as director for three months, till he resigned.<sup>13</sup> One sued for his unpaid subscription to stock of a corporation is estopped from denying that it had an existence, as against creditors, if he not only subscribed for the stock but became an officer of the corporation, serving as one of its directors.<sup>14</sup> One sued on behalf of a receiver of a corporation for an unpaid balance on his subscription to its stock is estopped from denying its legal existence and validity or disputing its de facto existence, if he was one of the incorporators and directors, and the suit is for the benefit of creditors of the insolvent corporation.<sup>15</sup> One signing a subscription to stock in a corporation which recites that it has been formed and issued a portion of its authorized stock cannot claim lack of evidence, in a suit by it on such subscription, of its corporate authority or its right to issue stock.<sup>16</sup>

§ 86. Id.: Defective Subscription Agreement.—The question of when a stock subscription agreement is binding has already been discussed.<sup>17</sup> A contract by one to subscribe to corporate stock is not per se discharged by the facts that a name of another subscriber on the same sheet as that of the first subscriber is canceled by lines drawn through it and that opposite his name is “By agree’t, Mar. 5, ’73,”—a date subsequent to the time of the subscription by the first one.<sup>18</sup> The liability of one to pay in full his subscription to the capital stock of a corporation to be formed is not terminated because his and the many other subscriptions were on as many different subscription blanks, the signatures to which were cut off and pasted consecutively on one of the blanks before it was filed with the Secretary of State.<sup>19</sup>

§ 87. Id.: Different Agreement with Other Subscribers.—One of several subscriptions to the capital stock of a corporation for securing to it working capital, all conditioned on the whole number of shares being reliably subscribed, is not in fraud of the other subscribers because the promoters of the corporation, as an inducement to the subscription, agree with the particular subscriber to take the stock off his hands within a year, at cost price, if he so desired; and they cannot escape liability so to do by pleading the invalidity of the agreement because of its alleged fraud on other stockholders.<sup>20</sup> It is no defense to one sued for an unpaid subscription to corporate stock that another subscriber was induced to subscribe under an arrangement that paid-up stock to the amount of his subscription should be delivered to him without his paying therefor and that the subscriber being sued made his subscription relying on the genuineness of such other's subscription and other subscriptions.<sup>1</sup>

§ 88. Id.: Statute of Limitations.—The statute of limitations on a claim for unpaid installments on subscriptions to capital stock of a defunct corporation does not begin to run from the time of the subscription but from the time an order is made for its trustee to call on the stockholders up to the par amount of their holdings for the benefit of corporate creditors.<sup>2</sup> A creditor of a corporation has no better right than the corporation itself to enforce payment of subscriptions of stock and is limited by the same statute of limitations.<sup>3</sup>

§ 89. Id.: Enforcement of, Who May Enforce.—When a plan is expressed in writing to form a corporation for a particular purpose and after such recital the words "we hereby subscribe" appear, followed by the signature of an individual, such individual may be compelled by the corporation formed pursuant to such plan to pay the amount of his subscription without any further move on his part.<sup>4</sup> ". . .

"There are agreements of a somewhat similar character which do not admit of enforcement and are not binding as a common-law agreement. It is quite easy to confuse the two classes, although there is a clear distinction between them. In the first class it is to be noticed that the agreement is to form a corporation and subscribe to its stock. The latter class are mutual agreements to subscribe for stock in a corporation thereafter to be formed. In the first the agreement is unconditional and absolute to form the corporation and take the stock, and when acted upon by the corporation is binding, as that is all that is needful to make the contract of force. Such contracts contemplate no further act upon the part of the person making such agreement. In the second class the agreement is to subscribe for shares when the company shall be organized. This clearly contemplates something more to be done, i. e., the actual subscription. There exists no agreement in such case to become stockholders. When the corporation is formed such agreement is to take shares, which involves a subsequent act, that of formally subscribing for the stock."

the president of a corporation has authority to receive the payment of subscriptions for its stock, even though the corporation is a trust company which cannot transact business until all its capital stock is paid in. . . . Subscriptions to stock are assets of the corporation, and there can be no doubt that a corporation can maintain actions to recover such subscriptions."<sup>5</sup> " . . . a cause of action upon an unpaid subscription to stock, when based merely upon the implied promise of the stockholder to make the payment, does not accrue to the corporation; but where there has been an express promise that promise may be enforced by action as in the case of any other contract liability."<sup>6</sup> One of many subscribers to a paper agreeing to pay the amount set opposite their names to a party selected by them, on establishment of a proper consideration for his undertaking, may be sued therefor by the individual selected as such party.<sup>7</sup> A stock subscription due on a contract between the subscriber and the corporation may be enforced, by attachment in this state against the resident subscriber on a debt owing by the corporation itself, by a creditor as lone plaintiff, without his suing on behalf of all creditors or a receiver bringing the suit.<sup>8</sup> Syndicate managers under an agreement showing an intention of the parties that each should pay the amount of his subscription to the managers who in turn should pay it to a lender of moneys used in buying bonds to be bought by such managers under the agreement may as trustees of an express trust sue to recover subscriptions to such bonds.<sup>9</sup>

§ 90. Id.: Pleading, Practice and Evidence.—An action may properly be brought on an original subscription to stock, without the necessity of averring calls, if no condition as to time of payment is attached.<sup>10</sup> An action brought by a corporation to collect unpaid subscriptions before the appointment of a receiver may be continued for the latter's benefit in the name of the original party.<sup>11</sup> The enforcement of an unpaid subscription to stock of a corporation may be accomplished in a statutory action by a creditor to sequester its property, by joining the subscriber as a party, on the theory that he owes the corporation the amount of his subscription which is available to its creditors.<sup>12</sup> A delivery or tender of a certificate of stock in a corporation to a subscriber to its original stock is not necessary as a condition precedent to the maintenance by its receiver of an action to recover the amount of his subscription in behalf of the corporate creditors.<sup>13</sup> A subscription for shares is a legal obligation enforceable by action and forfeiture for non-payment, and if a bond and mortgage be given to secure payment of the subscription it may be collected after he has demanded scrip for his shares and the company has neglected or refused to issue it.<sup>14</sup> An agreement by persons to form a corporation and subscribe to its stock is not so indefinite as to be unenforceable because the agreement to subscribe is not for a stated sum but a certain number of dollars or such portion thereof as may be necessary to provide the corporation with working funds and capital as a going concern, as how much will be necessary for such purpose is a matter of fact not difficult to ascertain and prima facie is the amount such persons fixed on in their agreement in fixing the amount of capital stock to be issued.<sup>15</sup>

their property to the company, which the bonds represented.<sup>17</sup> The meaning of the words "lawful purposes," in the statute prohibiting the issue of stock or bonds by a corporation except for money, labor done or property actually received for its use and lawful purposes, is "purposes not foreign to the business of the corporation and such as are not disconnected with the lawful management of that business," such as "to secure itself against ruinous competition whereby its whole business may be destroyed."<sup>18</sup> When divers persons owning property chip it into a corporation formed by them to hold it all for purposes of convenience and in which they only are stockholders, it is immaterial at what price the property was conveyed to the corporate entity.<sup>19</sup> The valuation of property, business and good will, as consideration for the issue of corporate stock therefor, is controlled by entirely different rules when it is made in the conversion of a family partnership into a family corporation than when it is made for the purpose of exploiting the public.<sup>20</sup> In determining whether property issued for stock is such as to make the stock full-paid the real question is whether the property was placed and taken at a high valuation with a fraudulent intent of evading the provisions of the statute; and an error in judgment or mistake in valuing the property, if made in good faith, will not of itself subject the stockholders to a personal liability.<sup>1</sup> Services rendered in bringing a corporation into existence is neither cash nor property for which its stock may legally be issued.<sup>2</sup> A corporation cannot issue its stock or bonds for services to be rendered in the future.<sup>3</sup> A certificate of stock, regular on its face, in the hands of the original owner, issued as consideration for his becoming president of the corporation, giving credit to it and his services as president to be rendered for one year after election, is void.<sup>4</sup>

§ 103. Id.: In General.—A subscriber to corporate stock does not upon receiving his stock acquire any inherent right to preserve the existing ratio between his stock and the stock issued and outstanding at that particular time.<sup>14</sup> “There is but one way in which the capital stock of a company can be increased and that is in the manner authorized by its charter, or by some express authorization of the legislature of the State. No acts of the officers or agents of the company are competent to enlarge the capital stock; nor can the stockholders do so, save in the particular manner pointed out by the statute. There is no such thing as an implied authority to increase or diminish the capital stock of a company.”<sup>15</sup> The number of shares of stock of a corporation authorized by its charter cannot be increased by any act or resolution of its board of directors or by anyone by the board’s authority.<sup>16</sup> It is doubtful if a statement in a report of a board of directors that it will not increase the corporate capital stock is sufficient to warrant the restraining of the company from doing so, if authorized by statute to do so.<sup>17</sup> “A stockholder coming into court and alleging that the increase of stock was unauthorized by the articles of association, in order to maintain his allegations, would have the burden to prove and establish that fact.”<sup>18</sup> An increase of capital stock by a resolution of the corporation’s trustees, followed by a ratification thereof by a stockholders’ meeting of which the statutory notice was not given, and of the proceedings of which no certificate was made or filed as required by statute, while illegal, is nevertheless validated as against the corporate creditors by acceptance by the stockholders of their proportions of the increased stock, their voting for such increase, their taking dividends upon it, and their holding it out to those dealing with the company as an actual component of its capital.<sup>19</sup> If a special statute permitting the incorporation of a particular corporation and giving it a charter neither requires the assent of the stockholders to an increase of stock nor provides for any public record of the action of the company in making the increase, but authorizes a majority of the directors to make the increase as its

as required for the increase or reduction of its capital stock; and if such increase or reduction of the number of shares be so authorized, the corporation must issue to each stockholder certificates for as many shares of the new stock as equal in par value the shares of the old stock held by him, upon surrender and cancellation of such old stock.<sup>8</sup> The increase or reduction of the number of shares of a corporation formed or reorganized to permit issuance by it of stock without par value has already been discussed.<sup>8a</sup>

§ 108. § 109. Id.: In General.—“ . . . if a corporation having power to issue stock certificates does in fact issue such a certificate, in which it affirms that a designated person is entitled to a certain number of shares of stock, it thereby holds out to persons who may deal in good faith with the person named in the certificate, that he is an owner and has capacity to transfer the shares;” and such a certificate must be regarded as a continuing affirmation of the ownership of the nominee and his power over the stock until it is withdrawn in some manner recognized by law.<sup>10</sup> “To countersign an instrument [e. g., a stock certificate] is to sign what has already been signed by a superior, to authenticate by an additional signature, and usually has reference to the signature of a subordinate in addition to that of his superior by way of authentication of the execution of the writing to which it is affixed, and it denotes the complete execution of the paper.”<sup>11</sup> stock from another who stole them is not good.<sup>8</sup> One buying stock from a lad of sixteen for one-third its market value through the conduit of a clerk may be held for its value by the true owner from whom the lad stole it, even though the stock certificate was endorsed in blank by the true owner.<sup>9</sup> One purchasing a voting trust certificate endorsed in blank by him in whose name it stands who intrusts it to another to have it transferred to the purchaser's name, is estopped from contesting the title of a holder thereof for value who acquired the certificate in due course from him to whom it was entrusted, even though the last mentioned individual was guilty of larceny in appropriating the instrument to his own use; because a voting trust certificate possesses elements of negotiability like a certificate of stock which are sufficient to protect the holder for value who acquires it without notice of any infirmity in the title of the holder.<sup>10</sup>

the common practice in cases of lost commercial paper.<sup>13</sup> Any person claiming any rights under the certificates alleged to have been lost or destroyed has recourse to such indemnity, and the corporation issuing such certificate is discharged from all liability to such person upon compliance with such order; and obedience to the order may be enforced by attachment against the officer or officers of the corporation on proof of his or their refusal to comply with it.<sup>14</sup>

§ 116. Id.: As Evidence of Title.—"The capital stock of an incorporated company is personal property; and it has not, neither has the certificate or other evidence of title or ownership, any of the qualities of commercial or negotiable paper. As a rule, the purchaser or assignee of shares of the capital stock in a corporation acquires no other or better title than the seller or assignor has, and takes it subject to the legal and equitable rights of third persons. . . . The property in the capital stock of a corporation is not distinguishable from other personal property; and the owner cannot be divested of his property except by his own voluntary act and consent, or by some act which would be effectual to give title as against him to other movable property and choses in action."<sup>4</sup> "The certificates are not the stock, but the evidence of its ownership."<sup>5</sup> "Certificates of stock are not securities for money in any sense, much less are they negotiable securities. They are simply the muniments and evidence of the holder's title to a given share in the property and franchises of the corporation of which he is a member."<sup>6</sup> "Mere possession of a non-negotiable instrument [a certificate of corporate stock], does not carry a presumption of ownership in the possessor."<sup>7</sup> While possession of an assigned stock certificate—though in blank—justifies a presumption of ownership, yet it is open to the corporation denying the possession to introduce evidence that the certificate was not delivered or was not delivered with intent to pass title.<sup>8</sup> A certificate of stock is evidence of the stock entitling the lawful holder to have his stock entered of record in the corporate books and to all the privileges of the corporation, but it does not prevent a person in interest from showing that the holder of the certificate is not the owner of the stock.<sup>9</sup> A stock certificate of itself is merely evidence tending to show the ownership of the shares and, although on its face in due form, may be the subject of inquiry to ascertain whether it was fraudulently issued; and the resolutions, book of minutes, annual reports and other proceedings may be looked to for the purpose of showing the real character of the transaction and as part thereof.<sup>10</sup> A certificate of corporate stock fifty years old is not admissible in evidence without direct proof of its execution as an ancient document to prove the title thereto of its assignee if the corporation went out of existence ten months after its date, and the sole evidence as to it is that it was found among plaintiff's grandfather's papers on his death nineteen years before the trial, and no proof is given of any connection between its nominal holder and the deceased grandparent as assignee thereof or of the custodian thereof.<sup>11</sup> A stock subscription paper is relevant and competent evidence upon a question whether a person is a stockholder.<sup>12</sup> Neither the doctrine in equity of notice of lis pendens nor the law of negotiable instruments applies to shares of corporate stock.<sup>13</sup> Pendency in another state of an action to determine the ownership of stock cannot be regarded as constructive notice that the ostensible absolute owner of stock holds it in trust.<sup>14</sup>

as of the date of such cancellation.<sup>9</sup> Delivery of a certificate of stock is to be presumed from the fact that it, with the proper endorsement, is in the possession of the holder.<sup>10</sup> A corporation cannot have an injunction against persons holding its certificates of stock which shall prevent them from disposing thereof or prosecuting any action against the corporation for its refusal to transfer them upon its books as an incident to a suit by it to determine what rights those persons have to such certificates, if the fault in issuing the certificates is the corporation's.<sup>11</sup> One to whom stock of a corporation has been assigned by others under agreement by him not to sell it and to give them three-fourths of the profits will be enjoined, together with another to whom he has transferred it without consideration, from making any transfer thereof pending an action against him for an accounting.<sup>12</sup> No presumption arises that a person is still stockholder of a corporation because he once had been, he has transferred his stock and he alleges that such transfer was obtained without consideration or by false representations.<sup>13</sup> Stock of a company may lawfully be surrendered or transferred to it under a resolution of its directors privileging its debtor stockholders on stock notes to pay their indebtedness in its capital stock at a specified rate.<sup>14</sup>

§ 121 Id.: Consideration of and for.—The mere existence of a precedent debt is not a sufficient consideration to support a transfer of stock by the debtor to the creditor as against one who has furnished the consideration for the stock originally, though it has been transferred into such debtor's name instead of his; and he may follow the stock into the hands of such creditor.<sup>15</sup> The transfer of corporate stock is sufficient consideration for a cheque.<sup>16</sup> A transferee without consideration of corporate stock from the wife of one in whose name it stood always on the corporate books, who in turn had received the unrecorded transfer thereof from her husband without consideration, cannot set aside a trust agreement, made by all stockholders of record and interested in the corporate property before he became such transferee, intended to rehabilitate the hopelessly insolvent and involved corporation, if this transferrer (the wife of the stockholder of record) held the stock for three years, while all the negotiations for rehabilitation were going on, and did nothing.<sup>17</sup>

§ 122. Id.: By Power of Attorney.—“ We know how, as a usual thing a transfer of stock is made. . . . An assignment of the stock in writing, is made by the former owner of it, with a power of attorney to transfer it on the books of the corporation. Books of transfer are kept for that purpose, and on the production of these papers, the nominated attorney makes the formal transfer, the old certificate is cancelled, and a new certificate is issued to the new owner.”<sup>18</sup> “ A blank transfer of a certificate of stock with an irrevocable power of attorney to transfer signed by the person who appears by the certificate to be the owner, confers upon the holder of the certificate apparent title to the stock and the bona fide transferee of such stock from the holder can hold the stock against the real owner, who is estopped from asserting his title (citations). The reason for this well-settled rule is that where one has conferred upon another apparent ownership, it is contrary to justice and good conscience to permit him to assert his real title against an innocent purchaser from one clothed by him with all the indicia of ownership and power of disposition. Another reason for the rule is that such a case calls for the application of the legal maxim that, where one of two innocent parties must sustain a loss from the fraud of a third, such loss shall fall upon the one, if either, whose act has enabled such fraud to be committed.”<sup>19</sup> “ Certificates of stock in business corporations, . . . are not negotiable in form, they represent no debt and are not securities for money. But the courts . . . have given to them some of the elements of negotiability. The owner of shares may transfer his title by delivery of the certificate with a blank power of attorney indorsed thereon signed by the owner of the shares named in the certificate. Such a delivery transfers the legal title to the shares as between the parties to the transfer, and not a mere equitable right (citation). The transferee in good faith and for value, holds his title free from latent equities between prior parties in the line of transmission.”<sup>20</sup> The rule is well settled that one who takes a certificate with the usual power of attorney as between him and the transferor takes the whole title, both legal and equitable, and it makes no difference that the blanks are not filled up.”<sup>21</sup> “It was only necessary to a valid transfer [of corporate stock] as between the parties, that the assignment and power should be in writing. The common practice of passing the title of stock by delivery of the certificate with blank assignment and power has been repeatedly shown and sanctioned in cases which have come before our courts.”<sup>22</sup> A power of attorney on a stock certificate is not incomplete because there are blanks for the number of shares and for the name of the attorney, as any holder may fill up the blanks and constitute himself the attorney.<sup>23</sup> “. . . a blank transfer of a certificate of stock with an irrevocable power of attorney to transfer, signed by the person who appears by the certificate to be the owner, confers upon the holder of the certificate apparent title to the stock and . . . the bona fide purchaser of such stock from such holder can hold the stock against the real owner who is estopped from asserting his title,” in the absence of fraud, crime or exceeded authority of an agent, even though the transfer and power of attorney are not endorsed on the back of the certificate but are in a separate paper; so that one putting it in the power of an agent to sell stock in this way cannot complain if the brokers making the sale pay the agent the proceeds or credit them to his account.<sup>24</sup> One loaning money on the security of a certificate of stock in the name of one not the borrower with a customary blank on the back for assignment and power of attorney not in any way filled in but with a separate slip pinned thereto in the same form, signed by the one in whose name the certificate is made out and with the signature guaranteed and received in the ordinary course of business, but without the name of the stock thereon, is entitled to use such slip as a valid transfer and power.<sup>25</sup> “Where stock is transferred under a power of attorney attached to a certificate, which

[of statute, charter and by-laws that stock shall be transferred only on the corporate books and by certificates signed in certain ways] are for the protection of the corporation, in securing its interests in its relations and dealings with stockholders . . . It has never been held that a corporation can avail itself of its own negligence as a basis of a cause of action against a stockholder, nor that it is not competent to waive a performance of its own rules, nor that it may not be estopped by its own acts and official declarations, the same as natural persons. If it did not provide a transfer book or did not transfer the stock according to the prescribed forms, the fault was its own. . . . It could waive the observance of any other rules which it had adopted."<sup>19</sup> When stock standing in one person's name on a corporation's books had been sold and assigned validly in writing, with the certificates, upon presentation of such certificates and assignment by the transferee to the corporation with a demand for transfer on its books, and a refusal so to do, and a return of the certificates and assignment, the transferee is vested with the entire legal and equitable title, and the corporation is as bound to recognize the transferee's title as if it had made the transfer, as "the requirement of a registry, existing only for its own protection and convenience, must be deemed waived and non-essential when it wrongfully refuses to obey its own rule."<sup>20</sup> Recognition by a corporation of a transfer of its stock ensues from payment by it of dividends thereon, and crediting them on its books to the transferee, though no change in the name of the holder be made in its stock book.<sup>1</sup> "The delivery of the certificate, as between the owner and assignee, with the assignment and power indorsed, passes the entire legal and equitable title in the stock, subject only to such liens or claims as the corporation may have upon it (citations). § 125. Id.: On Corporation's Books, Governing Statutes.—

No transfer of stock is valid as against the corporation, its stockholders and creditors for any purpose except to render the transferee liable for the debts of the corporation to the extent provided in the Stock Corporation Law until it has been entered in the corporation's stock book, as required by the statute, by an entry showing from and to whom transferred.<sup>3</sup> Other statutes governing the transfer of stock have been heretofore noted.<sup>4</sup> The statute making invalid any transfer of stock for any purpose except to render the transferee liable for the company's debts, unless made on its books, was enacted "to guard against secret and unavowed sales and assignments . . . by holding the vendor still liable until the transfer of his stock was avowed and made known in the mode prescribed, and to hold the vendee also liable as the real owner;" and the law will imply an obligation from the transferee to the transferrer that the burdens and liabilities consequent on holding stock will be assumed by the former, and will make good the latter's claim for such liabilities.<sup>5</sup> A statutory provision that corporate stock shall be transferable as provided by by-law, which stipulated that such transfer should only be on the transfer book on surrender of the certificate, "has reference solely to the transfer of stock from one stockholder to another, and not at all to the original issue of the certificates of stock by the company to its subscribers."<sup>6</sup>

§ 126. § 131. Id.: On Books.—The transfer of stock on a corporation's books has already been treated.<sup>5</sup> No transfer of stock is valid as against the corporation, its stockholders and creditors for any purpose except to render the transferee liable for the debts of the corporation to the extent provided in the Stock Corporation Law until it has been entered in the corporation's stock book, as required by the statute, by an entry showing from and to whom transferred.<sup>6</sup> " . . . one who authorizes and permits a transfer to himself of shares of stock upon the books of a corporation must be held to be a stockholder, whether in truth the real owner or not, when the rights of corporate creditors are involved, and is equitably estopped from denying the apparent relation;" but "if the act done, the false appearance created, is the act, not of the party, but of some third person, such party is in no manner bound or affected by it unless he either originally authorized it or subsequently ratified it."<sup>7</sup> One who has accepted corporate

§ 133. Id.: By Corporation of Another Corporation's Stock.—The power of one corporation to buy stock of another corporation is discussed in the four hundred and fifteenth section of this book. Any stock business corporation may purchase, acquire, hold and dispose of the stocks of any corporation and issue in exchange therefor its stock, bonds or other obligations if authorized to do so by a provision in the certificate of incorporation of such stock corporation or in any certificate amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, filed in pursuance of law, or if the corporation, the stock of which is so purchased, acquired, held or disposed of is engaged in a business similar to that of such stock corporation, or engaged in the manufacture, use or sale of the property, or in the construction or operation of works necessary or useful in the business of such stock corporation, or in which or in connection with which the manufactured articles, product or property of such stock corporation are or may be used, or is a corporation with which such stock corporation is or may be authorized to consolidate.<sup>14</sup>

§ 134. for sale of its stock to a third person without his knowledge, contrary to an agreement between himself and other incorporators giving them first chance to buy such stock, cannot succeed if he bring the action in a representative capacity unless he show an injury to the corporation from the sale, as "a plaintiff who asserts a derivative cause of action must establish the existence of a cause of action in the party whose rights are sought to be enforced;" his remedy is to enforce his personal right of action.<sup>4</sup>

§ 141. Id.: Fraud and Deceit In, In General.—Actionable deceit in inducing purchases of corporate stock cannot be practiced without an actual intention to deceive, resulting in actual deception and consequent loss.<sup>5</sup> "A false and fraudulent representation as to the property of a corporation of material facts which necessarily affect the value of shares of stock therein, constitutes a cause of action against a party inducing another by means of such fraudulent misrepresentation to purchase such shares quite as sufficient as if the purchase had been of the property of the company with regard to which the representation was made."<sup>6</sup> Ordinarily a vendor's statement that his wares are "of great value" will be held an expression of opinion rather than a representation of fact; but a statement that corporate stock has been fully paid is a statement regarding an extrinsic fact made to induce the public to buy, and if false a purchaser in reliance thereon may sue the officers and directors of the corporation making it for a conspiracy to rob the public.<sup>7</sup> A representation made to induce purchase of stock in a corporation that certain property had been acquired by it unencumbered except for a small debt and that it was a perfectly safe investment which the speaker was himself interested in and that the speaker was conversant with the whole situation, though there be no evidence that the representor knew his representation to be false or made it with intent to deceive, is in substance a representation that he knew the property and of the incumbrances on it and is sufficient for rescission of the sale and recovery of the consideration.<sup>8</sup> The rule of caveat emptor applies to a purchaser of corporate stock who himself proposes the purchase, is a

stockholder in the corporation and presumably could have satisfied himself as to its financial condition.<sup>9</sup> Two stockholders, each owning a third of a corporation's stock and being its president and treasurer respectively, may be held by the committee of the third owning the remaining stock for damages resulting from their fraud and deceit in creating an impression that the corporate business was not as profitable as it had been and that unusual losses had been sustained, whereby the last mentioned third of stock was bought by them at less than its value, when in fact any unusual loss was a matter of bookkeeping and the company had never been more prosperous; and the committee's remedy is not confined to a representative action to redress the wrong to the corporation.<sup>10</sup> A stockholder induced by fraudulent representations by another to sell the latter his stock may, on the dissolution of the corporation and acquisition by the latter of its business, rescind the sale and hold the latter as trustee of an implied trust.<sup>11</sup> Persons claiming they had been induced by fraud to enter into a syndicate agreement to purchase stock in a corporation have three lines of relief open to them: "They might retain that which they received and bring an action at law against the guilty party to recover damages sustained by reason of his fraud; they might bring an action for rescission of the contract in which it would be sufficient to tender back anything which they might have received under the contract; they might bring an action based on a prior rescission wherein, having previously tendered back what they had received, they would recover that which had been taken from them."<sup>12</sup> A syndicate agreement to subscribe to stock of a corporation made by each subscriber by its express terms not only with the other subscribers but also with the chief promoter as syndicate manager and for his benefit not only in authorizing him to purchase a corporation's stock in which he is majority stockholder but also in conferring upon him general powers as a manager, is voidable for fraud of such chief promoter as well as of the other subscribers.<sup>13</sup>

In an action to recover damages for loss sustained through subscription to a syndicate agreement on the ground of fraud by the chief promoter in suppression and misrepresentation of facts in that he did not disclose that the syndicate would purchase the stock of a corporation in which he was majority stockholder, a tender of stock in a new corporation which had acquired not only the chief promoter's stock in such other corporation but also various other property, and which new stock had been delivered to the plaintiff as his portion under the syndicate agreement, is sufficient as a prerequisite to an action based on rescission of the contract.<sup>14</sup> "If one by misrepresentation or suppression of facts when he ought to speak induces another ignorantly to make a contract appointing the first his agent to buy and conferring upon him discretionary power to purchase his own property, the contract is voidable and even if executed may be rescinded and the money recovered back on restoration of what has been received."<sup>14½</sup> If one agrees as agent to buy for another corporate stock and in pretended fulfillment of the agreement and with intent to defraud causes stock of the corporation to be transferred to such other which belongs to himself, retaining to his own use the money paid therefor, such other on discovery of the fraud may rescind the contract and recover back the purchase money paid.<sup>15</sup> The false representations of the holder of ninety-eight per centum and the controller of the remaining two per centum of the capital stock of a corporation in securing purchase of its stock are binding on the corporation and may be sued upon as its representations.<sup>16</sup> of it, but his $500,000 subscription in the agreement and statements by him that he was "putting in cash the same as" one of the subscribers and that "any man in joining puts in a dollar against the other man's dollar" and that there were no "inside profits" tended to exclude the idea he owned such stock.

making the representations in it.<sup>17</sup> One purchasing stock relying upon the truth of a prospectus has a right of action for deceit against any persons "who, with knowledge of the fraud and with intent to deceive, put it in circulation. The representation was made to each person comprehended within the class of persons who were designed to be influenced by the prospectus; and when a prospectus of this character has been issued no other relation or priority between the parties need be shown, except that created by the wrongful and fraudulent acts of the defendants in issuing or circulating the prospectus, and the resulting injury to the plaintiff."<sup>18</sup> "So if any person makes or causes to be made to the public at large for the purpose of inducing purchases of the stock of a corporation, false statements as to the solvency and prosperity of the corporation, any person acting upon such representations and suffering loss thereby may prosecute his action for damages."<sup>19</sup> One investing in corporate stock by purchase in the open market relying on false and fraudulent representation in a prospectus delivered to him and the general public for the purpose of inducing investment by the public in general and all persons into whose hands the prospectus should come, may sue at law to recover damages for deceit from those preparing, publishing and delivering the prospectus.<sup>20</sup> "Where a prospectus is circulated as an inducement to take stock in a corporate enterprise the language of the prospectus is to be interpreted by the effect which it would produce upon an ordinary mind . . . No permit had been granted for extension of the com-

the prospectus [to promote subscriptions to corporate stock] may be inferred from the falsity of the statements therein contained and that alone."<sup>2</sup> It is not error to allow a jury to pass on the character of representations in a prospectus that certain dividends have been paid by the corporation if the testimony shows such dividends had not been earned as a declaration that dividends have been paid imports that they have been earned.<sup>3</sup> It is proper to submit to a jury the question of whether or not a statement in a prospectus is true that 413,030 shares of the corporation's capital stock have been issued or are contracted to be issued, as it conveys the idea that the stock had been issued or contracted to be issued for money or property its equivalent in value, if as a matter of fact 410,000 of such 413,030 shares of the corporation's stock had been issued on account of a franchise bought for $250,000, as the disparity is so great as of itself to warrant an inference of fraud.<sup>4</sup> One relying in purchasing stock in a corporation upon written statements of its president, director and stockholder, positively misrepresenting material facts relating to its property and equipment, of the truth of which the representer had no personal knowledge and in making which he relied on information he believed received from engineers and others (but which he did not state to have been made on such information and belief), may hold such representer liable for the damages.<sup>5</sup> states two definite grounds of relief, one in fraud and the other in mutual mistake.<sup>14</sup> A cause of action to set aside a sale by the plaintiff of corporate securities as induced by fraud cannot be joined with a cause of action to compel the buyer to account for the property of the corporation he has received by virtue of his control of it acquired by the sale of stock in question in violation of an alleged agreement with the plaintiff.<sup>15</sup> A complaint for return of corporate stock exchanged because of false and fraudulent representations for stock of another corporation is not bad because no damage is alleged on the theory that the stock received in exchange may be as valuable as that given in exchange if the complaint allege that by the exchange plaintiff and those in harmony with him lost control of the corporation, the stock of which was exchanged, while one of the representations leading to the exchange was that by it the other corporation would control—which was not so.<sup>16</sup> If one selling stock sues the purchaser claiming, first, to recover the difference between the price paid him and a greater amount paid other stockholders, under an agreement whereby he should be paid such difference and, second, to have the stock he sold returned to him under an option given him by such agreement, he seeks to recover on two inconsistent theories, one under the contract and the other on disaffirmance of the contract, and must make his election: he cannot claim breach of the contract and demand damages conditioned on the existence of the contract as he does when he demands the largest price paid by the purchaser for any stock as the basis of the purchase of his own stock.<sup>17</sup> In an action based on failure to complete a contract for the purchase of corporate stock, the failure to pay the tax charged by statute on sales and transfers of stock is a matter to be plead in defense, and if this is not done it cannot be availed of.<sup>18</sup> To a complaint seeking to recover the agreed price of sale of corporate stock the defendant may counterclaim inducement by the plaintiff by fraud to make him enter into the agreement sued on.<sup>19</sup> An action to recover the value of shares of corporate stock pursuant to an agreement to pay therefor is to recover a sum of money, though to be gauged by the figures disclosed on an account of the assets and property of the corporation; and the Supreme Court cannot compel a reference to hear and determine, though it could, if it thought the case a suit in equity, refer the case so far as to have the testimony as to the value of such assets taken by a referee and reported to it with his opinion thereon.<sup>20</sup>

" . . . the doctrine of lis pendens, so far as it maintains that the mere pending of an action concerning the title to stocks, is constructive notice to all mankind, and that a purchaser acting in good faith is bound by the results of the action, is no part of the law of this State."<sup>21</sup> A cause of action at law to recover damages for deceit in having been induced by false and fraudulent representations to make a contract for the purchase of corporate stock begins to run from the consummation of the fraud and not from the discovery thereof, even though but part payment on the contract was made, and suit cannot be brought after six years from the date of the contract.<sup>22</sup> A broker seeking to recover commissions for securing a purchaser of stock of a corporation to be formed who never bought the stock because of false statements made by the principal to the broker must also allege in his complaint that such statements were communicated to the purchaser who relied upon them when he accepted the proposition to buy the stock.<sup>23</sup>

§ 144. Id.: Evidence and Proof.—One complaining that another induced him to buy certain stock by false and fraudulent representations has the burden "to show (1) that defendant made material representations to induce the purchase of the stock; (2) that the defendant knew that they were untrue; (3) that plaintiff relied thereon in making the purchase; and (4) that (s)he was damaged thereby."<sup>24</sup> The evidence sufficient to warrant the recovery of damages for fraud by one in inducing another to buy his holdings of stock in a corporation must tend to establish the falsity of the seller's statements and his knowledge of their falsity; and to this end facts and circumstances showing the seller's means of knowledge bearing upon the candor and integrity of his acts in his connection with the corporation and the management of its business are more freely admissible.<sup>25</sup> A memorandum concerning sale of corporate stock which omits the amount of the stock and the time of performance does not satisfy the Statute of Frauds.<sup>6</sup> Writings endorsed by one involved in a dispute as to ownership of corporate stock on returned certificates of stock are made for his own benefit and not in performance of his duties as officer of the company and are inadmissible in evidence.<sup>7</sup>

§ 145. Id.: Measure of Damages.— In an action to recover damages for breach of a contract of sale of corporate stock the measure is the difference between the price the plaintiff agreed to pay and the value on the day set for delivery; but an unaccepted offer for such stock in an isolated transaction, not shown to have been made in a market attended by sellers and buyers, or in the open market on the floor of the stock exchange, under circumstances warranting the conclusion that the person bidding was in a situation to buy, is no evidence as to the stock's value.<sup>8</sup> One buying stock which should have been delivered under contract is entitled to recover from him who failed to fulfill the contract the difference between the purchase price and the price at the time when the stock should have been delivered.<sup>9</sup> The measure of damages for deceit in selling corporate stock is the difference between the actual value of the stock sold and what its value would have been if the stock had been as represented.<sup>10</sup> In recovering damages for deceit in securing the sale of corporate stock the plaintiff can have only the difference between the value of the stock and what he paid for it.<sup>11</sup>

§ 146. Id.: Equitable Remedies.— One seeking equitable relief that he be given certain corporate stock pursuant to a certain transaction will be refused if he does not come into court with clean hands.<sup>12</sup> Specific performance by certain persons of their agreement to convey stock of a certain corporation to another individual will not be decreed if damages to the latter are an adequate remedy.<sup>13</sup> Equity will not exercise its discretion to award specific performance of an agreement to secure corporate stock to a plaintiff when there is nothing to show that its value cannot be determined so that

§ 148. Id.: Who May Be Pledgor or Pledgee.—While a blank transfer of a certificate of stock, with irrevocable power of attorney to transfer, signed by the person who appears by the certificate to be the owner, confers upon the holder of the certificate and power of attorney the apparent legal and equitable title to the stock so that a bona fide purchaser can hold the stock against the real owner, yet it does not per se and with the holder's verbal statement of authority confer upon the holder the power to pledge the stock for a loan to the owner.<sup>7</sup> A pledge of treasury stock by a corporation as collateral to a loan which would be valid if made to an outsider is none the less valid because a director of the corporation induced his firm to make the loan which no one else would make and as security for which the pledge was given.<sup>8</sup>

§ 150. Id.: Actions and Practice.—In an action against an individual pledgee of corporate stock and a corporation as joint wrongdoers in converting the stock, recovery may be had against one though not sustained against the other, and if the corporation took the stock from the pledgee knowing he converted it no tender of the stock to the company is needed to permit recovery of its value.<sup>11</sup> In an action to recover from certain persons who have converted the stock of a corporation, one who is a director but who had no connection as such or in any other way with the corporation until after the consummation of the alleged illegal scheme, is not a proper party.<sup>12</sup> An action by a pledgee of stock to recover damages from a third person who agreed to buy it from the pledgee at a stated price if the pledgor did not redeem it before a certain date is not to recover the purchase price but for breach of contract, and the fact that no tax was paid or stamps affixed at the time of the pledge is therefore no defence to the action.<sup>13</sup> A conversion of corporate stock by the pledgee does not entitle the pledgor to demand its return without tender of payment of his debt.<sup>14</sup> ration he can take his share of the assets thereof left for distribution, pro rata, among the shareholders. The corporation represents the whole body of the shareholders and to it, before a dividend has been declared, belong, in solido, all the assets in which the shareholders, as such, are interested. When a dividend has once been declared out of net earnings, the amount of such dividend is no longer a part of the assets of the company, but is appropriated or set apart for the shareholders. They receive credit for the dividends and the corporation simply holds them as their trustee. Therefore, before a dividend has been declared, a share of stock represents the whole interest which the shareholder has in the corporation, and when he transfers his stock he transfers his entire interest, and dividends subsequently declared, without reference to the source from which or the time during which the funds divided were acquired by the corporation, necessarily belong to the holder of the stock at the time of the declaration. But when the dividend has once been declared and credited to the shareholder, the amount thereof has been separated from the assets of the corporation and been appropriated to his use. It is then no longer represented by his stock, and is no longer an incident thereof; and hence when he transfers his stock he does not transfer his dividend, which remains subject to his control.”<sup>5</sup> “ . . . when a dividend is declared it belongs to the owner of the stock at that time, but . . . until such declaration the profits form part of the assets, and an assignment by a stockholder before such declaration carries with it his proportional share of the assets, including all undeclared dividends. This is so in regard to dividends declared, but which are payable at a future time, and such dividends belong to the owner of the stock when declared. . . . In the absence, therefore, of any provision in a contract of sale and purchase of stock, outside of and not subject to the rules of the Stock Exchange, the law declares that such a contract gives the dividends to the owner of the shares when the dividends were declared.”<sup>6</sup> A vendee of stock is entitled to all dividends thereon declared after the sale even though the transfer has not been recorded.<sup>7</sup> The purchaser under a contract for sale of corporate stocks by which the seller assumes to have them and agrees to deliver them on a certain date is entitled to dividends accruing between the sale and

§ 163. Id.: Preferred or Guaranteed Stockholders.—Preferred stockholders entitled to preferred dividends annually of a certain per cent. and “to no other or further share of the profits” cannot claim more than their per cent. of dividends, even though resulting from profitable dealing by the corporation in stocks which it was not organized to deal in.<sup>1</sup> A charter provision for cumulative dividends to preferred stockholders out of surplus profits before payment of any dividends to common stockholders is a contract binding on all stockholders, and such dividends are a charge upon the profits for all time, with accrued interest; so that on reduction of the company’s capital stock the preferred stockholders, though holding a less number of shares, are still entitled to be paid arrears of dividends on shares they had previously held from any dividends declared after the reduction before the common stockholders could receive any dividends, if such dividends were declared from surplus profits, but not if declared from a surplus of capital brought about by the reduction, as to which all stockholders share alike.<sup>2</sup> If a stock certificate alone entitle the holder to dividends at a stated rate payable at stipulated periods from net earnings and a guaranty thereon assure payment of the dividends as provided, it necessarily follows that, in the event that such earnings should not reach that amount or at any time failed, the dividends must afterward be paid from the net earnings when earned and received by the company; and “the reasonable and fair interpretation of the contract is, that the dividends were not only to be preferred but, being guaranteed, were cumulative and a specific charge upon the accruing profits, to be paid as arrears, before any other dividends were divided upon the common stock.”<sup>3</sup> Interest should be allowed a holder of preferred stock on dividends passed by the corporation to which he is entitled if

§ 166. Stockholders: Definitions, Distinctions and Nature.—

One is constituted a stockholder in a corporation by subscription to its stock; it is not necessary that a certificate for stock

be issued to him.<sup>1</sup> "It is often said that the great distinction between stockholders and bondholders is that stockholders are partners in the enterprise, while bondholders are creditors."<sup>2</sup> At the time of apportionment by corporate trustees of shares according to a certificate of incorporation, if the corporation then had property or valuable rights, or as soon as obtained, every person to whom shares are assigned acquires a proprietary interest in the company and becomes a stockholder.<sup>3</sup>

§ 167. Id.: Powers, Privileges and Duties, in General; Miscellaneous.—The certificate of incorporation of any corporation may contain any limitation upon the powers of its stockholders which does not exempt them from the performance of any obligation or the performance of any duty imposed by law.<sup>4</sup> "As a general rule stockholders cannot act in relation to the ordinary business of a corporation. The body of stockholders have certain authority conferred by statute which must be exercised to enable the corporation to act in specific cases, but except for certain authority conferred by statute, which is mainly permissive or confirmatory, such as consenting to the mortgage, lease or sale of real property of the corporation, they have no express power given by statute. They are not by any statute in this State given general power of initiative in corporate affairs. Any action by them relating to the details of the corporate business is necessarily in the form of an assent, request or recommendation. Recommendations by a body of stockholders can only be enforced through the board of directors, and indirectly by the authority of the stockholders to change the personnel of the directors at a meeting for the election of directors. Such action may or may not result in securing adequate, corporate action with reference to illegal or fraudulent acts . . . . Although it is said that the authority of stockholders in the management of business corporations is exhausted when they elect the directors (citation) nevertheless it is generally recognized that certain acts of boards of directors that are legal, but voidable, can be ratified and confirmed by a majority of the body of stockholders as the ultimate parties in interest and thus make them binding upon the corporation (citation). Such recognized authority in stockholders to ratify and confirm the acts of boards of directors is confined to acts voidable by reason of irregularities in the make up of the board or otherwise or by reason of the directors or some of them being personally interested in the subject-matter of the contract or act, or for some other similar reason which makes the action of the directors voidable. No such authority exists in case of an act of the board of directors which is prohibited by law or which is against public policy (citation). In any case where action is taken by stockholders confirming and ratifying a fraud and misapplication of the funds of the corporation by the directors or others the action is binding only by way of estoppel upon such stockholders as vote in favor of such approval.”<sup>5</sup> “While he [a stockholder] does not own and cannot dispose of any specific property of the corporation, yet he and his associates own the corporation itself, its charter, franchises and all rights conferred thereby, including the right to increase the stock. He has an inherent right to his proportionate share of any dividend declared, or of any surplus arising upon dissolution, and he can prevent waste or misappropriation of the property of the corporation by those in control. Finally, he has the right to vote for directors and upon all propositions subject by law to the control of the stockholders and this is his supreme right and main protection.”<sup>6</sup> “The equal and ratable distribution of the assets and the equal and ratable enforcement of the liabilities of a company, according to the interest of shareholders therein, is equitable and should be enforced, so that each shareholder may receive an equal proportion of the assets and contribute only an equal proportion to discharge its liabilities. This principle . . . applies as well to the proceeds of calls as to property already in hand. In other words, shareholders have equal rights and must bear equal burdens.”<sup>7</sup> Any stockholder not party to arrangements by directors of a corporation for virtually suspending the functions for which it is incorporated may complain and demand restoration.<sup>8</sup> When the charter appoints the corporation’s directors to manage its affairs, its stockholders as such cannot make a lease of its property, even though they be also

And where such stock is registered on the books of such corporation in the name of, or has passed by operation of law or by virtue of any last will and testament, to more than two fiduciaries, and dispute shall arise among them, the said shares of stock shall be voted by a majority of such fiduciaries, and in such manner and for such purposes as such majority shall authorize, direct or desire the same to be voted. inspectors or persons presiding at the election may administer such oath, and all such oaths and proxies must be filed in the office of the corporation.<sup>20</sup> The books and papers containing the record of membership of the corporation must be produced at any meeting of its members upon the request of any member; and if the right to vote at any such meeting is challenged, the inspectors of election, or other persons presiding thereat, must require such books, if they can be had, to be produced as evidence of the right of the person challenged to vote at such meeting, and all persons who may appear from such books to be members of the corporation may vote at such meeting by proxy subject to the provisions of the General Corporation Law.<sup>1</sup> No member of a corporation must issue a proxy to vote to any person for any sum of money or any thing of value.<sup>2</sup> Any person is guilty of a misdemeanor who, being entitled to vote at any meeting of the stockholders of a stock corporation, sells his vote, or issues a proxy to vote to any person for any sum of money or thing of value, except as expressly authorized by law.<sup>3</sup> The record holder of stock (1) held by him as security or (2) which actually belongs to another, upon demand therefor and payment of necessary expenses thereof, must issue to such pledger or actual owner of such stock a proxy to vote thereon, except in cases (a) of express trust, or (b) in which other provision has been made by written agreement between the parties.<sup>4</sup> A transfer, absolute on its face, by the owner of corporate stock to another, designed only to confer upon the latter the power to vote thereon for a period of years is, in substance, a proxy given for a consideration, and is void.<sup>5</sup> It seems that an agreement between stockholders perpetually to give certain of themselves by proxy from others the control of the corporation might be void.<sup>6</sup> A by-law declaring that a stockholder's proxy must himself be a stockholder to be entitled to vote as such for the former is void if the corporation is created under a law which simply enacts "that the

What they might originally have done, they may do afterwards, and their subsequent assent is equivalent to original authority.”<sup>9</sup> The validity of a blanket ratification by stockholders at an annual meeting of the acts of their officers for a long period of time depends upon the knowledge of the facts by them when they passed the resolution of approval.<sup>10</sup> “The direct or indirect misappropriation of assets of the corporation to his own use or benefit by an officer is incapable of being authorized or ratified by a vote or any act or omission of the majority of the stockholders;” but a proceeding by such officers, such as the sale of its property to a syndicate having members in common with its directors, conducted in good faith and in furtherance of the corporation’s purposes, though voidable, may be ratified by the stockholders through a duly had majority vote.<sup>11</sup> “It is well settled that a misappropriation of the funds of a corporation cannot be ratified as against the rights of creditors by all the stockholders of a corporation, and that no such ratification, even by all but one of the stockholders, would be binding upon the corporation itself.”<sup>12</sup>

A treasurer of a corporation may be compelled to state under oath the condition of its affairs at the instance of a stockholder who is a director as well as of a stockholder who is not a director, if the stockholder owns five per cent of its capital stock.<sup>16</sup> "If the stockholder wishes to enforce the penalty he must see to it that he is a stockholder of record at the time of making the demand upon the treasurer for a statement of the affairs of the corporation."<sup>17</sup> The executor of a deceased holder of half of a corporation's stock who has been refused a demand for information of its affairs by its officers is entitled to an order for the names and salaries of its officers and directors; its net profits for two years past; the names of its banks and deposits therein; its cash on hand, accounts and bills receivable, and liabilities outside of capital stock, its total indebtedness due from its two largest creditors; changes in salaries and whose were increased; and overdrafts of officers and employees.<sup>18</sup>

§ 177. Id.: How Often.—The treasurer or chief fiscal officer of a corporation is not required to deliver more than one statement of its affairs in any one year.<sup>19</sup> The statute permitting one holding five per cent of the stock of a corporation to compel its treasurer to give him a sworn statement of its affairs expressly provides that the treasurer shall not be required to deliver more than one statement in any one year, thus showing that a particular stockholder cannot have more than one such statement a year; so that one suing to recover the statutory penalty for the treasurer's neglect to give the statement must allege that the latter has not delivered a statement during the fiscal year within which the demand was made.<sup>20</sup> "The statute provides that this statement [of the affairs of a corporation], when made, shall be open to the inspection of any stockholder demanding an examination thereof, and that only one such statement can be required during any one year."<sup>1</sup> stockholder thereof upon demand a "statement of the affairs of said company, under oath, embracing a particular account of all its assets and liabilities, in minute detail," is satisfied by a sworn statement of its assets and liabilities.<sup>3</sup> A treasurer furnishing a stockholder demanding the statutory statement under oath of the corporation's affairs with a sufficient statement save that it is not sworn to is liable to the statutory penalty for failure to furnish the prescribed statement, unless the stockholder waive the oath.<sup>4</sup> Acceptance without objection that it was not verified of an unverified statement by a corporate treasurer of his corporation's condition up to a date earlier than that first asked for, in pursuance of a modification of the demand for a statement to a later date, precludes recovery of the penalty for refusing to give such statement or the right to any other statement during that year.<sup>5</sup>

§ 180. Id.: Of Majority, In General.—"An illegal corporate act cannot be ratified by majorities of stockholders."<sup>10</sup> "It is well established that the ownership of a majority of the stock of a corporation, while it gives a certain control of the corporation, does not give that control of corporate transactions which makes the holder of the stock responsible for the latter."<sup>11</sup> One who is president and owner of a large part of the stock of a corporation has no power to give away its property.<sup>12</sup> The courts, on the application of a stockholder controlling the corporation by his holdings prior to an issue of stock which he seeks to have cancelled, cannot pendente lite enjoin the corporate officers and directors from exercising or interfering with the corporate management in any way, because "presumably the power of managing the business of a corporation is vested solely in its officers and directors . . . . The court may arrest such officers in some proposed course or halt them in the doing of some specific act, but it cannot . . . . virtually remove the directors, for it thereby practically winds up the corporation pendente lite, or, if not, it vests some of the corporate powers in a mere stockholder by virtue of such status, which it cannot do."<sup>13</sup> The persons who, though minority stockholders, constitute the majority of the directors, will not be temporarily enjoined from selling further stock at the instance of a majority stockholder who would not remain so if the further stock were sold and who is at odds with them in an action by the latter ostensibly to obtain a permanent injunction but really to get such temporary injunction so as to tie up the corporation's board till the next stockholders' meeting whereat the existing board could be changed.<sup>14</sup> One taking stock in a corporation formed to build an apartment the by-laws of which subject all questions as to the purchase of land and erection of buildings and lease of apartments to the vote of the majority stockholders takes title to an apartment in a building erected by the company not legally but as an equitable right upon the reasonable conditions imposed by the majority stockholders under the by-laws.<sup>15</sup> An agreement evidencing nothing more than an attempt by two parties holding the majority of the stock of a corporation to perpetuate, by their personal contract, their joint control of the corporate affairs, cannot be considered a partnership agreement warranting an application for judgment annulling the agreement and dissolving the partnership.<sup>16</sup> An agreement by a majority of the directors and the owners of a majority of the stock of a corporation for the purpose of perpetuating themselves and their successors in office and control of the company, not only during their own lives, but for years after their death, without regard to the rights of a minority of the directors or stockholders, is an unlawful combination, whether morally corrupt or intended for the benefit of all stockholders and the corporation.<sup>17</sup> One corporation has the right to buy the stock of another and vote it; buy the mortgage bonds of such other, foreclose and use the property bought on foreclosure in any way allowed by law; and minority stockholders suffering thereby cannot justly complain; but it cannot directly injure the minority stockholders by doing anything unlawful in its corporate affairs which is a breach of trust toward such minority.<sup>18</sup> The powers, privileges and duties of minority stockholders in general are shortly discussed.<sup>19</sup>

§ 181. Id.: Voting Salaries in Fraud of Minority.—A court of equity will always give relief to a minority stockholder from the acts of a majority in disposing of all the profits by voting themselves salaries not commensurate with the work done by them.<sup>20</sup> The general rule that acts done in the interest of the corporation, not fraudulent or ultra vires, may be ratified by a majority of the shareholders does not enable majority stockholders for selfish purposes to act in hostility to the interests of the corporation with the intention of defrauding the non-assenting stockholders, by voting, after the commencement by a minority stockholder of a representative action to compel the directors or officers of the corpo-

§ 183. § 184. Id.: Invoking Court Protection Against Acts of Majority.—The interference of a court in the internal management of a corporation is hereinafter discussed.<sup>15</sup> The power of majority stockholders to vote salaries in fraud of the minority has been discussed.<sup>16</sup> The court will not at the request of a minority of the holders of corporate certificates determine whether the minority or the majority are right as to the goodness of the policy of entering into an agreement, not ultra vires, which a trustee acting for the majority has deliberately ratified in good faith, to which the majority have not objected and under which third parties have acquired substantial rights.<sup>17</sup> “. . . the court should not interpose in a dispute between the majority and minority stockholders in relation to the ordinary control and management of its corporate affairs, or substitute its judgment as to the proper management and control of the corporation for that of the directors elected by and representing the majority stockholders. It is the duty of the court, however, to interfere, if called upon, when the proposed action of the majority is so detrimental to the interests of the corporation itself as to lead to the necessary inference that the interests of the majority of the shareholders lie wholly outside of, and in opposition to, the interests of the corporation and of a minority of the shareholders, and its consummation would be a wanton or fraudulent destruction of the rights of the minority stockholders.”<sup>18</sup> “To warrant the interposition of the court in favor of the minority shareholders in a corporation or joint-stock association, as against the contemplated action of the majority, where such action is within the corporate powers, a case must be made out which plainly shows that such action is so far opposed to the true interests of the corporation itself as to lead to the clear inference that no one thus acting could have been influenced by any honest desire to secure such interests, but that he must have acted with an intent to subserve some outside purpose, regardless of the consequences to the company and in a manner inconsistent with its interests.”<sup>19</sup> “To

§ 187. Id.: Actions By, In General.—In a stockholder's representative action the hurt or benefit not of the stockholders individually but of the corporate entity is alone in issue.<sup>10</sup> One bringing a representative stockholder's action has no standing to proceed until he can have issued to himself the stock to which he claims he is entitled.<sup>11</sup> "If a stockholder brings an action against the corporation and fails, the payment by him of the judgment for costs puts him in the same relations to it that he had occupied before. The directors could not resist his application to transfer his stock by setting up a claim that the corporation, by reason of the suit, was obliged to pay out large sums for counsel fees and expenses in the litigation which were not covered by the taxable costs."<sup>12</sup> When corporate stock is delivered by one to another for use for a designated purpose and it is used for another, the transferrer is not limited to an action for recovery of his damages but may sue in equity for a rescission of the transaction and return of the stock, or an accounting.<sup>13</sup> An action by minority stockholders in their own interest, solely against a majority corporate stockholder, based on an alleged trust relationship between them to compel the latter to account directly to the former for profits it holds to their exclusion, lies far outside the limits of an action in behalf of a corporation against many defendants as alleged workers of fraud whereby the corporation has been stripped of its property to recover back such property.<sup>14</sup> A stockholder enjoined from disposing of his holdings pending an action by the corporation to rescind as fraudulent the contract by which he acquired them is not guilty of contempt through joining in an action in

§ 188. Id.: What Stockholders May Sue.—The equitable owner of stock in a corporation may properly bring suit in equity to protect his interest and that of other stockholders in the corporate property.<sup>16</sup> One showing a legal right, by reason of owning corporate stock, to question the corporation's acts (in issuing preferred stock) and having a personal interest in obtaining the judgment which he seeks, is not liable to have his motives inquired into by the court.<sup>17</sup> One buying stock to bring and carry on litigation against the corporation will not be allowed to have or retain an injunction if his rights can be preserved by awarding damages for such injury as he may have sustained.<sup>18</sup> One who has placed his holdings of corporate stock in a voting trust may nevertheless bring a representative action to enjoin corporate acts.<sup>19</sup> Stockholders of a holding company may maintain a representative action for the benefit and in behalf of the subsidiary company, the directors of both companies having refused, after due request, to institute an action in the name of either company.<sup>20</sup> One pledging his corporate stock with a voting trustee with whom all other stock is also deposited has no individual cause of action for mismanagement of the corporation against the trustee resulting in an injury to the corporation, common to all stockholders, although such injury incidentally depreciate the value of his pledge; but for a direct injury to his stock, not common to all stockholders as such, the pledgor may have his action notwithstanding he is also a stockholder.<sup>1</sup> “. . . a stockholder may bring an action in behalf of the corporation for the benefit of himself and all other stockholders, to set aside as fraudulent an improper transaction consummated at the expense of the corporation before he acquired his stock.”<sup>2</sup>

In the absence of special circumstances a stockholder may bring an action on behalf of himself and all other stockholders to set aside as fraudulent a transfer and exchange of the corporation's stock for the purpose of avoiding the transfer and exchange as an improper transaction consummated at the expense of the corporation even though the consummation took place before he acquired his stock.<sup>3</sup> A stockholder in existence before stock of his corporation is issued at gross overvaluation for patents, or the corporation itself may disaffirm the agreement for such stock issue; but if all the stock is so issued there can be no existing stockholder and no one can complain — not even one buying some of such stock at less than par after its issue and return as a gift to the corporation by the person to whom originally issued for patents.<sup>4</sup> A complaint by one not alleged at the time of the commencement of the action to hold stock in a corporation against an individual to recover damages for injury by the reduction in value of such stock through wrongful acts of the individual in taking possession of the corporate office and business at best sets forth a cause of action in the corporation rather than in an individual stockholder and will not lie: certainly it will not warrant attachment.<sup>5</sup>

§ 189. Id.: When Corporation Must Sue or Be Asked to Sue.—In determining whether an action at law for recovering damages should be brought by a stockholder of the corporation damaged as an individual, or for and on behalf of the corporation and its stockholders as a whole, the question is whether the damages belong to the individual stockholder or the corporation; and in determining this question, it must be borne in mind that the rights of creditors are superior to those of stockholders: e. g., the action should be brought by a stockholder as an individual when he has been induced to purchase stock and pay a higher price than it was fairly worth, or when he has been induced to part with his stock for less than its value through false and fraudulent representations of others; but the action should be brought in the name of the corporation or as representative of all stockholders when the acts complained of are waste and destruction of the corporation's property and franchises through obtaining a controlling stock interest, refusing opportunities for business, diverting its

of all stockholders, lies at all, which is doubtful.<sup>1</sup> A representative action by a stockholder to recover of stockholders of his corporation sums unpaid on their stock, to adjust the claims of its creditors and to pay in full or ratably, should have all stockholders as parties and when reduced to judgment will inure to the benefit of all other creditors who prove their claims and contribute their proportion to the expenses of the litigation; but original subscribers to the stock who never paid ten per cent. on their subscriptions need not be made parties, nor stockholders who subscribed certain amounts and then released the corporation from all obligations on account of their subscription which was then declared forfeited by the directors, even though the details essential to forfeiture be not alleged.<sup>2</sup> In a derivative action by minority stockholders to recover an amount in the hands of the vendor of property to their corporation, alleged to have been fraudulently obtained, the burden is on them to prove over his denial that this amount, which they seek to hold him for under an obligation created by operation of law, is still in his hands.<sup>3</sup> The statute of limitations against proceedings by a stockholder and director to compel restitution to his corporation by a representative stockholders' action of loans made by it to another stockholder and director is the ten year statute and does not begin to run till the death of the latter if he continues as stockholder and director till such death.<sup>4</sup> A judgment in a successful representative action by a stockholder to have paid back into the corporate treasury money improperly voted therefrom as officers' salaries should not also direct the distribution of such sum among stockholders by the corporation, as the declaration of a dividend should not be made by the court.<sup>5</sup> A stockholder who has received certain property on account of stock which he has released and surrendered to other stockholders and the corporation, if he desires to have that transaction set aside as fraudulent and his original stock restored to him, should, it seems, either tender back what he has received before bringing his action or offer in his complaint to restore what he has received as the proceeds of the alleged fraudulent transaction.<sup>6</sup> " . . .

No valid reason exists, either in law or equity, why several stockholders of a corporation seeking redress of those who are conspiring to defeat their rights should not be allowed to unite in a single action for that purpose. . . . where the board of directors of a corporation is acting in a manner destructive of the rights of the other shareholders, or where the majority of the shareholders themselves are oppressively and illegally pursuing a course in the name of the corporation which is in violation of the rights of the other shareholders and which can only be restrained by the aid of a court of equity, an action to obtain relief may be maintained by a stockholder."<sup>7</sup> There is a distinction between the liability of a corporation owing its stockholders dividends from money which has never been severed from the mass of the corporate property, which must be enforced by an action at law, and the liability of its directors who have set apart the money into a distinct fund to pay dividends and hold that fund as the stockholders' trustees, but refuse to distribute it, and the former is an individual stockholder's action while the latter is a stockholder's representative suit, which cannot be joined in one complaint.<sup>8</sup> A plaintiff bringing a cause of action as a stockholder of a corporation to enforce a right of action existing in favor of the corporation cannot join the other stockholders as parties defendant when no relief is asked against them and when in no aspect of the case can they be entitled to any relief or be subject to any liability.<sup>9</sup> A stockholder's action to compel an individual as such, and with another as members of a partnership, to account to the corporation of which the plaintiff is a stockholder and they both were directors and one an officer, as its financial agents, will not be sustained when the gravamen of the complaint is simply their failure to cause the corporation to keep what the plaintiff considered proper books of account and to render proper accounts from the plaintiff's viewpoint.<sup>10</sup> A representative action by a stockholder to recover for acts prejudicial to stockholders' rights may be brought against the corporation without alleging its refusal to act for their relief upon demand if such wrongs are alleged as existing and continuing down to the time of the commencement of the action, and without hav-

The liability of stockholders for the debts of a corporation the capital stock of which is not fully paid is "a fund which any creditor of the company may reach," and if the stockholder sought to be held for his liability "is himself such creditor to an amount equaling his statutory liability, he has quite as good a right to the fund which is pursued as the pursuer." If the stockholder is not a creditor when accounts are adjusted between himself and the company he has no equity against the fund. Wheeler v. Millar, 90 N. Y. 353 (1882); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 10. In an action against a stockholder of a corporation who is also a creditor thereof to hold him to his liability for its debts by reason of the fact that its capital stock is not fully paid, the stockholder has an interest, as a creditor, in the fund constituted by statute from the several liability of the stockholders, irrespective of whether the money advanced by him to the corporation was used to pay obligations for which he was individually liable or not, and may defend by setting up his advances against his stockholdings. "A stockholder owning $1,000 of stock with a debt against the company of $5,000, sued by a creditor for $1,000, would himself be entitled to five-sixths of the $1,000, if there were no other stockholders personally liable and no other debts; and if there were other personal liabilities to the amount of $5,000, and no other debts, he would be entitled to $5,000 of the $6,000 constituting the fund. It matters not whether the right of action to so many arises from general principles of law, or from particular provisions of constitution or of statute. . . . § 203. Id.: After Disposal of Holdings by Sale, Transfer, on Books, etc.—The statute provides that no transfer of the stock of a corporation is valid as against its creditors for any purpose except to render the transferee liable for the debts of the corporation to the extent provided therein until such transfer has been entered in the corporate stock book as required by the statute, by an entry showing from and to whom transferred.<sup>14</sup> A judgment creditor of a corporation seeking to hold a stockholder for the amount unpaid on his holdings makes out a prima facie case of ownership by showing his name on the company's books as holder of such stock.<sup>15</sup> The statute making a holder of stock liable for any amount unpaid thereon imposes the liability upon every holder of stock, but it is a question of fact for the jury to decide whether one appearing on the corporate books as holder of stock who testifies that he simply signed an assignment in blank on a certificate of stock presented to him by his employer who beneficially held the stock is a holder so as to be liable under such statute.<sup>16</sup> It was held in an old case, decided before the present statute, that a receiver of a corporation cannot hold liable for the unpaid balance on its stock one who has at one time held the stock but has transferred it by signing the power of attorney on the certificate of such stock in blank and delivering it to the transferee, to whom the corporation has paid dividends thereon, even though the transfer has never certificate of full payment of its capital stock, it must be borne in mind that if the corporation files such certificate and later increases its stock, the stockholder who was such before the increase is no longer liable for corporate debts, but only the stockholders who become holders of stock after the increase, and they only to the amount of the increase. *Veeder v. The distinction between the two forms of action is retained, however . . . .”<sup>7</sup> Creditors of a corporation are only entitled to collect on unpaid subscriptions to stock so far as necessary, and although as to them two or more defendants may be liable only one satisfaction may be had as to the same stock or that issued in place thereof.<sup>8</sup> No suit can be brought in this State by a judgment-creditor of a corporation to hold its bonus stockholders to an amount equal to the par value of their holdings under a foreign statute unless such a statute giving such right is alleged.<sup>9</sup> Decisions under repealed statutes are collected in the note.<sup>10</sup>

His liability is measured by the amount of stock held by him. To entitle a stockholder to interpose such discharge as an absolute bar to a claim by other creditors, either at law or in equity, it would . . . be incumbent upon him to show that the payment was made to a creditor or creditors for whose debts he was liable under the statute. He is only liable to pay the amount once; but the payment must be made in discharge of a statute liability. Probably the same effect would result from a voluntary payment.” Mathez v. Neidig, 72

§ 205. Id.: When Stock Fully Paid.—The cases now cited were rendered under former statutes; but the principles set forth seem soundly applicable to the present law. In determining whether or not stockholders are personally liable for the debts of their corporation, on the ground that their holdings were not fully paid for because of the issue of their stock for property less valuable than the stock issued therefor, the real question is of fact, viz.: whether the property was placed and taken at a higher valuation with a fraudulent purpose, with the intent of evading the provisions of the statute.<sup>11</sup> “ . . . to charge a holder of stock, issued upon and for the purchase of property, individually for the debts of the company, it is not enough to prove that the property has been purchased and paid for at an over-valuation through a mere mistake or error of judgment on the part of the trustees, but . . . it must be shown that the purchase at the price agreed upon was in bad faith and to evade the statute.”<sup>12</sup> “ . . . a mere mistake or error of judgment by the trustees [of a corporation], either as to the necessity or value of property, purchased by them in good faith ” with stock of the company will not subject a stockholder to liability on the ground that the stock of the company is not full paid.<sup>13</sup> In determining the personal liability of holders of stock of a corporation issued for property on the ground that it is not fully paid it must be borne in mind that “ a discretion is vested in the trustees which calls for the honest exercise of their judgment. If they acted in good faith [in issuing stock for certain property] the stockholders could not be made liable. The real question in cases of this character is whether the property was placed and taken at a high valuation with a fraudulent intent of evading the provisions of the statute. . . . where property, the value of which is well known and understood, or capable of

E. 422 (1901); L. 1848, c. 40, and amendments, §§ 10, 11, making stockholders individually liable to creditors upon their holdings until certificate of payment of whole capital stock had been recorded. The purpose of the law making corporate stockholders individually liable for their corporation's debts to the amount of their stockholdings until its whole capital shall have been certified to have been paid in is to provide a fund for the security of creditors; and if payment is taken for stock in property, it must be properly necessary for the business of the company and of the value of the stock paid for it, so that the transaction may always be impeached for fraud, of which an actual value of the property at one-half the price paid for it in stock is evidence. *Boynton v. a stockholder personally liable for his corporation's debt an execution must have been issued and returned unsatisfied on the judgment which is the foundation of the plaintiff's suit — not on some other judgment.<sup>5</sup> A creditor's action against a stockholder in a limited liability company for its debt, when it is organized under a statute providing that suit on the debt must first have been brought against the company but not requiring that execution against the company must have been returned unsatisfied before an enforceable liability arises against the stockholder, may be maintained after a suit to recover the debt has been commenced against the corporation, but before judgment has been obtained thereon against the corporation.<sup>6</sup> A cause of action in favor of a receiver of a corporation incorporated in a State the laws of which make its stockholders liable, above the stock owned by them and any amount unpaid thereon, to a further sum at least equal to the amount of such stock, does not accrue till judgment is rendered fixing and determining the amount of the assessment upon the stock.<sup>7</sup>

§ 208. The complaint in an action under the statute to hold stockholders for debts of their corporation need not allege recovery of judgment and return unsatisfied of execution thereon in an action against the corporation if it allege excuse for failure to obtain such judgment, etc.<sup>8</sup> The statutory condition precedent to maintenance of an action to enforce the liability of a stockholder in a manufacturing company that "an execution against the company shall have been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part" will be dispensed with only "(1) where the corporation has been dissolved by judicial decree; (2) where by final judgment in an action for sequestration a perpetual injunction has

and have an execution returned unsatisfied enables the creditors to maintain an action for the recovery of any debt which, within the meaning of the statute, fell due during the preceding year without first obtaining judgment against the corporation and having an execution returned unsatisfied.<sup>13</sup> Although as a condition precedent to holding a stockholder liable for his corporation's debt no judgment recovered against it and execution returned thereon unsatisfied is necessary if it has been dissolved, yet no such dissolution results from the appointment of a receiver for it and injunction upon it from exercising its franchise or intermeddling with its property; and in such a case one seeking to hold a stockholder for a corporate debt must still get his judgment against the corporation.<sup>14</sup>

§ 209. Id.: Judgment Against Corporation as Measure of Stockholder's Liability.—The statute provides that the amount due on the execution returned unsatisfied in whole or in part on the judgment recovered against the corporation is the amount recoverable.<sup>15</sup> “. . . the provision of the statute prohibiting the bringing of an action against a stockholder for a debt of the corporation until judgment therefor has been recovered against the corporation and an execution thereon has been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part at least requires a verdict determining the amount of the plaintiff's claim and that the stockholder, when he is called upon to pay, cannot be required to ascertain the amount from estimates and figures made by the plaintiff's brother as to the various items included by the jury in their verdict.”<sup>16</sup> The provision of the statute that the amount due on an unsatisfied execution issued after a judgment against a corporation shall be the amount recoverable against a stockholder is not equivalent to saying that the judgment and execution shall be all the evidence necessary to fix the amount recoverable from the stockholder but means that the amount due on the execution required to be issued shall be a limitation of the stockholder's liability and not proof of an indebtedness for which the stockholder is liable.<sup>17</sup> As an analogous provision to that contained in the present statute was contained in statutes which were precursors of the present law the decisions under the former statutes are given in the note.<sup>18</sup> The extent to which a judgment against the corporation is evidence of the debt owing from a stockholder is discussed in cases decided under old statutes and collated in the note.<sup>19</sup>

§ 210. Id.: Statute of Limitations Against.—No stockholder is liable personally for any debt of the corporation unless an action for its collection is brought against the corporation within two years after the debt becomes due, nor for any debt of the corporation not payable within two years from the time it is contracted, nor to any action after he has ceased to be a

<sup>18</sup> In an action against a stockholder, to enforce his liability under a statute making him individually liable to corporate creditors to an amount equal to the amount unpaid on the stock held by him for all its debts until the whole capital stock held by him has been paid, a judgment recovered by him against the company is competent evidence of his status as a creditor of the company and of the amount due him (from the corporation). Stephens v. Fox, 83 N. Y. 313 (1881); Gen. R. R. Act, L. 1850, c. 140, § 10, as amend'd L. 1854, c. 282. In an action by a judgment creditor of a corporation to hold a stockholder for the debt, under a statute making stockholders liable to an amount equal to their capital stock until the whole capital stock shall have been paid and a certificate thereof filed, the judgment against the corporation is of no virtue against the stockholder and is only evidence as proving the performance of the condition precedent, and the stockholder may show there was no debt due from the corporation to the plaintiff. Lawyer v. Rosebrook, 48 Hun, 453 (1888). A stockholder of a corporation the capital of which is not fully paid and sued, therefore, under a statute, for a debt of the company on its draft, is prima facie bound by a judgment in evidence on the draft insofar as the legality of the draft is concerned.

Hoagland v. Bell, 36 Barb. 57 (1861).

<sup>19</sup> It seems to be questionable "whether a judgment against a company is in a separate action against a stockholder for the recovery of the same debt, evidence of the debt sued upon." McMahon v. Macy, 51 N. Y. 155 (1872); Gen. R. R. Act, L. 1850, c. 140, §§ 10, 11, as amend'd L. 1854, c. 284. It seems that in a statutory action against a stockholder to recover a debt contracted by his corporation, "a judgment previously recovered by the plaintiff against the corporation upon the same demand, . . . [is] prima facie evidence of a debt against the defendant; but subject to be impeached for collusion or mistake." Moss v. Averell, 10 N. Y. 449 (1853); L. 1837, c. 441, § 9. A judgment debt against a corporation, unless shown to have been had by collusion or fraud, is binding on a stockholder in an action to hold him individually for such debt. Conklin v. Furman, 57 Barb. 484 (1865); aff'd 48 N. Y. 527; L. 1847, c. 210, § 14, making stockholders liable for corporate debts to the amount of their holdings. McCullough*, 7 Barb. 279 (1849).

stockholder unless brought within two years from the time he ceased to be a stockholder.<sup>20</sup> Decisions under former statutes containing statutes of limitation of similar period are used in the text as well as opinions concerning the statute now in force, because of the similarity of all such laws. While the power of the legislature is undoubted to alter or amend the Statute of Limitations and apply it to existing liabilities, yet it cannot change the period of time for which a stockholder shall be personally liable for his corporation's debts, so as to bind stockholders who are such at the time of the statute's amendment; because a stockholder's liability for the corporate debts accrues only after judgment had against the corporation and execution thereon returned unsatisfied, and is that of a surety, guaranteeing the solvency of the corporation during that period only for which the statute made him liable when he became a stockholder.<sup>1</sup> The legislature may change the limitation upon an action by a corporate creditor to enforce the liability of corporate stockholders for corporate debts to the extent of unpaid subscriptions on their stockholdings.<sup>2</sup> " . . . whenever an existing stockholder shall be divested of his interest in or control over the affairs of a corporation, whether by voluntarily transferring his share to another person, or compulsorily as by forfeiture upon the declaration of the company . . . ; time begins to run, and at the end of two years the statutory limit is reached and he is no longer liable for any debt of the corporation. The same result must follow upon the actual dissolution of the corporation by formal judgment, or by a surrender of its corporate rights, privileges and franchises. Organization then ceases and the artificial entity is resolved into its independent parts. The thing itself therefore no longer existing, there can be no shares in the thing and of course no stockholders."<sup>3</sup> A time limitation imposed by statute on an action by a creditor of a corporation against one of its stockholders for recovery of the debt on the ground that the whole of the corporate stock has not been paid in is a matter of defense, waived if not plead by answer, which need not be negated by allegations of the complaint.<sup>4</sup> When under a statute stockholders are liable for their corporation's debts to the amount of their stockholdings from the time the corporation is liable, the fact that they cannot be sued separately until judgment is had against the corporation does not prevent the statute of limitations from beginning to run against a suit against them separately from the time the corporation became liable rather than from the time judgment is had against it.<sup>5</sup> Renewal notes given by a corporation do not operate to prevent the running of the statute of limitations against a claim against the stockholder on his personal liability by statute for the corporate debts.<sup>6</sup> The statute limiting the time within which a stockholder may be sued for an indebtedness of his corporation is a general statute of limitations which affects full liability business corporations as well as others.<sup>7</sup> Though there is an apparent conflict between the statute providing that stockholders of a full liability corporation shall be liable for all debts and the statute providing that stockholders shall not be liable for any corporate debt not payable within two years from the time it is contracted, yet the latter statute is applicable as a statute of limitations to an action brought under the former.<sup>8</sup> The purpose of the statute providing that no stockholder shall be personally liable for any debt of his corporation not payable within two years from the time it is contracted is "to prevent the extension of a credit to a corporation for a longer period than two years;" and, therefore, the fact that an original debt, later assumed by a corporation, has run for a longer period than two years before sued upon against the corporation is immaterial, if the company becomes chargeable with it (because of its maturity) within two years from the time it assumes payment, as not till such assumption does it become the corporate debt.<sup>9</sup> The liability of stockholders of a business corporation individually for its liabilities is contingent on an

§ 212. Id.: Defenses Of and Contributions Among Stockholders.—Decisions under statutes preceding the present law and differing in some respects from it are made use of, as well as opinions rendered under the exact text of the law as it now stands. On the grounds of sound public policy and the plain rules of good faith one who has agreed with a corporation to take shares of its stock for a stated sum, though he has later paid less than ten per centum of his subscription, if he has acted as director of the corporation, received dividends from and sold his stock, will be held a stockholder liable to pay to its trustee in bankruptcy so much of the amount unpaid on his subscription as is necessary to satisfy its creditors.<sup>16</sup> A stockholder cannot be held to his statutory liability for his corporation's debts based on notes given by it out of the regular or ordinary course of its business as part of a scheme by those acting as corporate officers to saddle its liability upon its stockholders and in that way make good their own claims against the company.<sup>17</sup> While the language of a statute making corporate stockholders liable to creditors of the corporation for the amount of their holdings of stock until the capital stock is wholly paid in may be broad and general, yet it must not be construed to permit directors of a moribund corporation to constitute themselves creditors for salaries or wages and thus impose liabilities upon confiding and innocent stockholders.<sup>18</sup> The fund created by a statute from the personal liability of a stockholder to an amount equal to his holdings on failure to file a certificate of payment of its capital stock is a trust which the corporate officers and directors must apply honestly and in good faith for the interest of the company and its creditors; and a director cannot, therefore, buy up the company's outstanding debts for his own benefit, knowing it to be insolvent, so that as a stockholder, liable under the statute for the corporate debts, he may offset the debts he has bought against his personal liability.<sup>19</sup> A stockholder of a corporation liable for an indebtedness by it to another because of non-filing of a certificate of payment of capital stock, pursuant to a then-existing statute, is not relieved from such liability by reason of the fact that a note was given by it for its indebtedness, as the note does not merge or extinguish the demand for which it is taken and the original consideration remains.<sup>20</sup> " . . . a defect in the proceedings to organize a corporation is no defense to a stockholder sued to enforce his individual liability [for its debts under a statute because of its failure to file an annual report], who has participated in its acts of user as a corporation de facto, and appeared as a stockholder upon its books, when the debt for which he is sued was contracted."<sup>21</sup> The dissolution of a corporation and the appointment of a receiver of its assets operates to terminate the relation of its stockholders to it, so that no action may be brought against them after the passage of two years after dissolution on their statutory liability for its debts.<sup>2</sup> A stockholder who as an officer of a private corporation signs its notes is estopped from disputing their validity in an action by its creditor to hold him to his liability for its debts under a statute making stockholders liable therefor.<sup>3</sup> In an action to charge a stockholder for stocks and bonds of a corporation received under circumstances by which he incurred a liability to pay an unsatisfied judgment against his corporation, an offset of judgments against the corporation in favor of the stockholder is allowable.<sup>4</sup> A stockholder of a safe deposit company who is also a creditor in a class which would entitle him to enforce the personal liability of other stockholders may properly offset his loans to the company against his liability as a stockholder; but he cannot use such offset against a stockholder suing him and other stockholders to enforce their statutory liability as such for the company's debts when the

But if the stockholder thus prosecuted can show that he has already paid, on account of the debts of the corporation, a sum equal to the liability which the statute has imposed, namely, the amount of his stock, he will, so far as that remedy is concerned, have defeated the action. . . . If the creditor cannot find a responsible stockholder, who is not, at the same time, a creditor to the amount of his stock, he must proceed for an account, if he ascertains that such a proceeding will result in recovering his debt. An allegation is a complaint to hold a stockholder to the amount unpaid on his holdings for a debt of his corporation unrecoverable by execution to the effect that he has paid into the treasury not exceeding $3,000, whereas his holdings amount to $4,800, "leaving a balance due on said stock of at least $1,800," does not state facts sufficient to show that defendant has not fully paid for his stock, as he may have paid the balance in services or property, and the quoted clause is but a conclusion.<sup>12</sup> A complaint to hold a stockholder to the amount unpaid on his holdings for a debt of his corporation unrecoverable by execution must show that it is a stock corporation; and this is not sufficiently shown by allegations that its name is so and so and that goods, wares and merchandise were sold by it.<sup>13</sup> In a complaint against a stockholder to recover a judgment-debt against his corporation on the theory that the holdings of the defendant have not been fully paid for it is not sufficient to allege that there was something due on the defendant's subscription at the time the corporation's debt was contracted, but it must be stated that there was something due at the time the judgment was recovered and execution thereon was returned unsatisfied.<sup>14</sup> Decisions involving the sufficiency of complaints in actions under former statutes governing the liability of stockholders for corporate debts are given in the note.<sup>15</sup>

stockholders under their statutory liability for the wages of their corporation's servants.<sup>8</sup> An assignee of a liability which has accrued and become fixed by a corporation to a laborer for wages may hold a stockholder to his statutory liability therefor.<sup>9</sup> A stockholder who has paid a judgment had by a laborer for wages due from the corporation may not at law sue one alone of his co-stockholders for contribution, but must bring them all in in an equitable action; because their liability is that of co-partners and is joint and several.<sup>10</sup>

§ 222. Id.: Who Liable.—Only a stockholder holding his stock in some way other than as collateral security, or as executor, administrator, guardian or trustee can be held liable to his corporation's laborer, servant or employee, unless he, though holding the stock as executor, administrator, guardian or trustee, voluntarily invested the trust funds in such stock.<sup>11</sup> The statute making stockholders of a corporation liable for its debts to its laborers, servant and apprentices for services rendered it "means to hold liable those stockholders who are shown to be such at the time when the debts are due and owing. And the burden of proof is upon him who sues, to show that there is a debt due and owing for services performed for the corporation, by a laborer, or a servant, or an apprentice; and that the person sued is, when the debt is due and owing, a stockholder of the company."<sup>12</sup> In order to prove that defendants are stockholders in an action by a laborer to hold them liable for wages for work done for their corporation it is sufficient to show that they were trustees or directors and that the statute under which the corporation was formed required such to be stockholders; and "having been thus shown to be stockholders at the time the corporation was formed, they will be presumed to continue such until the contrary shall be established", even though a book offered shows their resignation as trustees.<sup>13</sup> It seems that one who remains on corporate books as a stockholder is personally liable for statutory liabilities, e. g., for a debt of the corporation to a servant for services rendered, although he has pledged or assigned his stockholdings.<sup>14</sup>

§ 223. Id.: For What Liable.—Stockholders are liable for all debts due and owing by their corporation only if (1) for services performed for such corporation (2) by any of its (a) laborers, (b) servants or (c) employees—other than contractors—who (3) have given the stockholders notice in writing that they intend to hold the stockholders liable (a) before charging such stockholders and (b) within thirty days after the termination of such services and (4) have commenced an action against the corporation for such debts within two years after it became due and (5) have obtained judgment therein against such corporation and (6) have had execution on such judgment returned unsatisfied in whole or in part, and (7) have commenced an action for such debts against the stockholders within thirty days after the return unsatisfied of such execution upon the judgment against the corporation, and (8) whose debt is payable within two years from the time it is contracted.<sup>15</sup> A stockholder of a corporation is not liable, under the statute making him liable for the corporation's debts to its laborers, servants or employees, for damages for breach of contract by the corporation, or for materials purchased or money borrowed by it; but only for services rendered; and he cannot, therefore, be charged with costs incurred in the defense of an action prosecuted against the corporation for damages upon causes of action other than that embraced in the statute.<sup>16</sup> A distinction is made in the statute making stockholders liable personally for the corporate debts to its "laborers, servants, and apprentices": "The stockholder must pay, not debts due to all employees of the company, but those due to 'laborers, servants, and apprentices,' and not all debts due to them, but only such as are due for 'services' performed for such corporation. . . . the services referred to are menial or manual services—he who performs them must be of a class whose members usually look to the reward of a day's labor, or service, for immediate or present support, from whom the company does not expect credit, and to whom its future ability to pay is of no consequence; one who is responsible for no independent action, but who does a day's work, or a stated job under the direction of a superior. . . . To the language of the act must be applied the rule common in the construction of statutes, that when two or more words of analogous meaning are coupled together, they are understood to be used in their cognate sense, express the same relations, and give color and expression to each other. Therefore, although the word 'servant' is general, it must be limited by the more specific ones, 'laborer and apprentice' with which it is associated, and be held to comprehend only persons performing the same kind of service that is due from the others. . . . The word used is no doubt broad enough, and might without exaggeration, represent all persons connected with the administration or furtherance of the affairs of a corporation; in this instance, from the one who dips or bottles the water, to the president, but this would manifestly be too general. 'Laborer or apprentice' are words of limited meaning, and refer to a particular class of persons employed for a defined and low grade of service performed . . . without responsibility for the acts of others, themselves directed to the accomplishment of an appointed task under the supervision of another."<sup>17</sup> The purpose of the statute making stockholders of a corporation personally liable for debts due its laborers, servants or employees was "the protection of those who earned their living by manual labor, and not by professional services, and who were supposed to be the least able to protect themselves", i. e., "such employees as perform services in subordinate positions and for whose inclusion within the scope of the provision there is a politic reason."<sup>18</sup> A bill of exchange drawn by a laborer on a corporation for wages and accepted by it gives the transferee thereof for value not only the right to the money specified in it but the original consideration upon which the bill was drawn and accepted, so that the transferee may hold a stockholder to his personal statutory liability for such wages.<sup>19</sup> A laborer or servant of a corporation seeking to hold a stockholder for his wages, which are payable monthly, may only recover for the last year's.<sup>20</sup>

§ 224. Id. vidually liable for all debts owing to its "laborers, servants and apprentices, for services performed for such corporation," it must be borne in mind that "in common parlance, it [the word "servant"] is understood to relate and apply only to a person rendering service of a subordinate, but not necessarily of a menial, character to an employer, varying in its nature, according to the business or occupation in which it is rendered, and not to extend to and include every employe or party who does work for another. The context in which it is used . . . being associated with 'laborers' and 'apprentices,' indicates that it was intended to apply to a person employed to devote his time, and render his service in the performance of work, similar in its general character to that done by those employes."<sup>2</sup> Contractors with a corporation are not within the scope of the statute making its stockholders liable for debts due its laborers and servants for services performed for it.<sup>3</sup> A stockholder of a corporation is not individually liable for a debt due a laborer of a contractor of the corporation for services rendered the contractor.<sup>4</sup> A consulting engineer cannot be held an operative or laborer of a corporation so as to render its stockholders liable for the value of services he renders it.<sup>5</sup> One employed by a corporation as a civil engineer and traveling agent is a servant who may hold its stockholders for its debt to him.<sup>6</sup> One per-

§ 225. Id.: Necessity and Effect of Judgment First Had Against Corporation.—One seeking to hold a stockholder personally for a claim for wages due from the corporation cannot rely on a judgment and execution thereon unsatisfied in an action in a court which had no jurisdiction as satisfying the statutory condition precedent; but he can rely on a Supreme Court injunction against proceedings by creditors as excusing such a judgment, etc., although rendered in a sequestration action based on a judgment in a court which had no jurisdiction.<sup>13</sup> The statutory requirement that no action may be brought against a stockholder for an amount due a laborer for services rendered the corporation until judgment has been recovered against the corporation does not necessitate the perfecting of a judgment in a court of record in which the judgment would be a lien on the corporate realty; so that obtaining a judgment in a Justice's Court, the issuance of an execution by the justice and its return unsatisfied is a compliance with the statutory requirement.<sup>14</sup> In order that a laborer may hold a stockholder for wages due him by a corporation he must obtain a judgment in this State (not in another) against the corporation, and must prove that the wages were to be paid within one year from the time when the liability therefor was contracted (not simply allege that the labor was rendered the company during stated years).<sup>15</sup> In an action to hold stockholders for wages due by their corporation to its servants a judgment recovered against it is essential to the right of action but is proof of nothing beyond the fact of its own existence, and is not evidence of the amount the plaintiff is entitled to recover.<sup>16</sup> A judgment by one against a corporation is of itself no evidence against a stockholder of the indebtedness of the company to the judgment creditor in an action against the stockholder to recover the amount of the judgment as the amount due the judgment creditor for services rendered the corporation as laborer.<sup>17</sup> A judgment of the Supreme Court sequestrating a corporation's property, appointing a receiver and forbidding creditors from suing the corporation or interfering with its assets is a sufficient excuse for non-compliance by an employee of the corporation suing a

§ 226. Id.: Pleading, Practice, and Evidence.—A complaint in an action against a stockholder to hold him to his personal, statutory liability for wages of a laborer for the corporation which alleges its incorporation under the statute imposing such liability, performance of work for it for two years prior to the date when the amount claimed became due for labor for it as its request, recovery of a judgment within a month thereafter against it for such labor, return of execution thereon unsatisfied and the standing of defendant as a stockholder now and when plaintiff performed his work, is sufficient.<sup>19</sup> A complaint in an action to hold stockholders for debts due their corporation's laborers, servants or apprentices is not sufficient if it allege that the services were rendered as the secretary to the corporation; and the addition of the words "and otherwise" does not help the pleading.<sup>20</sup> While a laborer for a corporation cannot, after bringing an action to hold stockholders liable for his wages under the statute, discontinue as to one of them, yet if such one's verified answer denied he was a stockholder, the discontinuance amounts to a withdrawal of the allegation of the complaint that he is a stockholder and the action properly continues as to the other defendants unless there be some other legal evidence that he is a stockholder.<sup>1</sup> When an action authorized by the law of the State of New York is brought against one or more persons as stockholders of a corporation, an objection to any of the proceedings cannot be taken by a person properly made a defendant in the action on the ground that the plaintiff has joined with him as a defendant in the action a person whose name appears on the stock-books of the corporation as a stockholder thereof by the name so appearing, but who is misnamed or dead or is not liable for any cause.<sup>2</sup> In such a case the court, at any time before final judgment, may, upon the

§ 227. Bonds and Mortgages: Definitions, Distinctions and Nature.—The power of a corporation to borrow money in general is discussed in the three hundred and ninety-fifth section of this book. “The distinguishing feature of a bond is that it is an obligation to pay a fixed sum, with stated interest. It may or may not be secured, but if it is, and the security proves to be insufficient, the indebtedness is not thereby wiped out. The distinguishing feature of stock is that it confers upon the holder a part ownership of the assets and the right to participate according to the amount of his stock in the surplus profits of the corporation, and ultimately, on its dissolution, in the assets remaining after the payment of its debts (citations). It is fundamental that a stockholder, whether common or preferred, cannot have a lien on the property of the corporation, even though the stock by its terms is accorded a lien (citations). . . . a form of security which should possess all the attributes of stock, including a right to share ratably in the profits and increase in value, and at the same time to preserve a specific lien upon the company’s assets which should be superior to the claims of creditors . . . cannot lawfully be done. . . .”<sup>1</sup> “The word ‘debenture’ as defined means ‘a writing acknowledging a debt;’ when, therefore, a certificate is declared to be a preferred debenture share of capital stock, it presents a legal contradiction, a debenture being the acknowledgment of a debt and a share of stock representing a contribution of capital to a corporate business equal to the amount of its face value, either in money or in property.”<sup>2</sup> “. . . mortgages mean the instruments which charge property with the liability to make good the debt its owner has contracted. They may be said to describe a property liability, which is evidenced by the promissory note, or bond of the property owner. They are collateral, or incident to the debt itself, and where made, . . . to secure the payment of bonds, they cannot properly be termed the debt or liability of the obligor, but only the liability charged upon his property. . . . The word ‘mortgage,’ taken in its literal sense, or in affecting legal conditions, means the liability impressed by the company upon the property then owned, or thereafter to be acquired. . . .”<sup>3</sup>

§ 228. Id.: In General.—Corporate bonds have their situs where they are, not where the corporation maintains a place of business, in so far as an injunction to prevent payment of interest thereon is concerned, pending determination of their ownership.<sup>4</sup> In the absence of a statute prescribing a particular form of proof or acknowledgment of a deed or mortgage made by a corporation, a form in use for many years will be held sufficient.<sup>5</sup>

§ 229. Id.: Subscriptions.—Under a syndicate agreement by which subscribers agree to pay certain sums for the ultimate purchase of bonds, and which shows an intention (though not an express statement) of all parties that each subscriber should pay the amount of his subscription to certain persons named as syndicate managers, who in turn should pay it to the lender of the moneys used in purchasing the bonds (taking up bonds to the amount paid and delivering them to the subscriber), the syndicate managers may sue for an unpaid subscription, and it is not necessary that the lender of the moneys, with whom the bonds were pledged, should sue.<sup>6</sup> An action to cancel a subscription to a syndicate agreement for the purchase of bonds of a corporation to be formed may successfully be maintained if the only consideration running to the subscriber is that of the syndicate managers to issue to subscribers upon payment of their subscriptions negotiable receipts in a form prescribed, as the rule that a sufficient consideration for a subscription to stock results from the rights acquired by a subscriber by acceptance of the subscription does not hold when the contract is to become a shareholder in a corporation at a future time.<sup>7</sup>

§ 230. Id.: Issue and making, In General.—“In general, the right to mortgage inheres in the ownership of property as much as the right of other disposition; but it is competent in the case of corporations to restrict their powers and regulate their exercise in such manner as public policy and the interests of those investing their means in these artificial organizations may dictate.”<sup>8</sup> There is no rule of law prescribing any particular form to the mortgage given by a corporation pursuant to statute and by consent of its stockholders on its

realty to secure payment of its debts.<sup>9</sup> A corporation sufficiently "owns" realty as to validate the requisite statutory assent to the mortgage by its stockholders if at the time of their signatures to the assent it occupies the premises under a contract of purchase pursuant to which a deed was taken.<sup>10</sup> The burden is on one claiming that corporate bonds which are valid on their face are invalid to prove his contention.<sup>11</sup> There is no objection to a mortgage of corporate realty to secure payment of debts made pursuant to statute because it authorizes a sale, after certain notices specified, in a city of this State, of real estate situated outside the State, as our statute in reference to the sale of mortgaged premises under a power of sale contained in a mortgage has reference only to real estate and mortgages recorded in this State.<sup>12</sup> A mortgage given by a corporation upon all its property to a trustee to pay its creditors (whom it could not otherwise pay) is invalid if those creditors who do not accept the ten-year bonds, secured thereby, in payment of their claims, are left without any security; because such a scheme is a clear threat to those creditors who will not grant what is virtually a ten-year extension to make doubtful if not worthless their claims.<sup>13</sup> If a resolution of a corporation directing issue and sale of its bonds stipulate that the treasurer and president execute them but do not state who shall sell them and the by-laws do not show what the duties of the corporation's officers are, it is not apparent that this duty falls more directly upon any one than the president, and if he sells some and turns others over to the vice-president to sell, he is not accountable for the latter but only for those he himself sells.<sup>14</sup> A claim that a mortgage given a corporation to secure a loan made by it to an individual is usurious and void because a subscription to its stock was exacted of the borrower as a condition for making the loan cannot be upheld if the condition was imposed by an incorporator before the company was incorporated and was never ratified by it.<sup>15</sup> No objection can be made by a corporation holding on to property for which it has issued its bonds that the issue was irregular: "That kind of plunder which holds on to the property but pleads the doctrine of ultra vires against the obligation to pay for it, has no recognition or support in the law of this state."<sup>16</sup>

§ 231. Id.: For What Purposes.—No corporation can issue bonds except for money, labor done or property actually received for the use and lawful purposes of the corporation.<sup>17</sup> A corporation may issue and dispose of its obligations, and mortgage its property and franchises to secure the payment thereof or of any debt, if such obligations and mortgage are to secure payment of money borrowed by it or debts contracted by it, necessarily, in the transaction of its business or for the exercise of its corporate rights, privileges or franchises or for any other lawful purpose of its incorporation.<sup>18</sup> " . . . it is not foreign to the lawful business and objects of a corporation to secure payment of its debts by way of mortgaging its property."<sup>19</sup> The statutory authority to a corporation to secure payment of any debt which may be contracted by it in its business by mortgaging its property on consent of holders of two-thirds of its capital stock permits the issue of corporate bonds secured by mortgage on its property as security not only for corporate debts contracted simultaneously with the delivery of the bond but as well of past debts; and, possibly, for purposes other than the payment of existing debts.<sup>20</sup> The statute authorizing a mortgage of a corporation's realty to secure payment of its debts permits of a mortgage of such realty by it to secure payment of bonds issued to the creditors or sold to raise money to pay them.<sup>1</sup> The fact that corporate bonds are unauthorizedly issued for the purpose of raising money to carry on the business as well as the authorized and legal purpose of paying debts does not invalidate the mortgage made to secure the bonds insofar as it is security for the payment of the debts.<sup>2</sup> “Corporations, unless restrained by their charters, have the power to mortgage their property to secure borrowed money, or their debts,” and the statutory permission to corporations to mortgage their property on assent of holders of two-thirds of their capital stock, while it removes the restraint as to mortgaging realty does too as to personalty; so that as to both, therefore, the mortgage could only be to secure the payments of debts and not to raise money merely to carry on the operations of the company.<sup>3</sup> It is not within the province of the Supreme Court to allow the sale of the properties of an insolvent corporation upon a mortgage for the entire consideration with a condition that the amount may be abated from time to time by the mortgagor delivering up stock of the corporation, procured by it in any method at a valuation not then ascertained by any legal proceedings or other method than the statement of its value to be found in the corporation’s books, as this would be “equivalent to the purchase by an insolvent corporation of its own shares from its stockholders, and would seem to be ultra vires and beyond the power of the court to authorize.”<sup>4</sup> The courts will enjoin a corporation at the behest of a minority stockholder from issuing corporate bonds entitling the holders, after payment in full of principal and interest, to receive an equal share with the stockholders and the balance remaining until the one-half apportioned to the stockholders shall amount to the sum paid into the company’s treasury by them, whereupon the bondholders are to receive the entire balance; because present stockholders cannot be excluded from sharing in the surplus and profits of the company, if any, after payment of the bonded indebtedness and existing prior obligations.<sup>5</sup> A corporation formed under a statute permitting the borrowing of money for the purpose of carrying on its business or operations and the mortgaging of its property and franchises to secure payment of its debts contracted for the purpose of its business cannot mortgage except to secure a debt which could be enforced against itself nor borrow after it has transferred all its property and

§ 232. Id.: On What as Security.—A corporation may mortgage its property and franchises to secure the payment of its obligations and debts, as authorized by statute.<sup>8</sup> A corporate mortgage on realty given pursuant to statute to secure payment of its debts may cover future as well as present real estate of the company.<sup>9</sup> “A corporation, without some statute allowing it, can neither sell nor mortgage its franchises”; but this fact does not invalidate, as security for corporate debts, a mortgage issued by it on its realty pursuant to law to secure payment of such debts, even though it also cover its franchises.<sup>10</sup> Bondholders secured by a mortgage on corporate property described as projected when the mortgage was made but changed before completion are secured by the completed property if the mortgage in terms conveys all property to be acquired.<sup>11</sup> When, after a corporate trust mortgage has been made additions are made to its plant, necessary to the operation thereof, under a contract by which title thereto remains till payment is made therefor in full in the vendor, and the mortgagor becomes insolvent, on foreclosure and sale of such additions together with the mortgaged property the vendor is entitled from the purchase price first to be paid whatever remains due on the purchase price of the additions.<sup>12</sup> It is probable that a trust mortgage by a gas company extends to after-acquired personal property.<sup>13</sup>

§ 234. Id.: At Less Than Par.—“ . . . The statute makes the recital or representation in a mortgage affecting property or franchises in New York, executed by authority of its board of directors in behalf of a foreign or domestic corporation of any description, in substance or effect, that its execution has been duly consented to or authorized by stockholders, presumptive evidence after public record of the mortgage in New York that its execution has been duly and sufficiently consented to and authorized by stockholders as required by any provision of law.<sup>20</sup> The statute further makes a recital or representation in substance or effect, in any mortgage affecting property or franchises in New York executed by authority of the corporation's board of directors in behalf of any domestic or foreign stock corporation of any description, that the execution of such mortgage has been duly consented to or authorized by stockholders, after such mortgage has been publicly recorded for more than one year in one or more of the counties of New York State containing the whole or any part of the mortgaged premises and after the corporation has received value for bonds actually issued under and secured by such mortgage and after interest has been paid on any of such bonds according to the terms thereof, conclusive evidence that the execution of such mortgage has been duly and sufficiently consented to and authorized by stockholders as required by any provision of law, and its validity is not impaired by reason of any defect or insufficiency of consent or authority of stockholders or in filing or recording such consent or authority, but the mortgage is valid and binding upon the corporation and those claiming under it as security for all valid bonds issued or to be issued thereunder, unless such mortgage is adjudged invalid because of insufficiency of consent by stockholders in an action begun for such purpose within one year after the earliest record of such mortgage in any county of New York State, provided such action is begun by or in behalf of the corporation by direction of the board of directors acting in their own discretion or upon the written request of the holders of not less than one-third of the capital stock of the corporation.<sup>1</sup> In any such action so begun by or on behalf of the corporation the recitals or representations of the mortgage are presumptive evidence after public record thereof within New York only that the execution of such mortgage has been duly and sufficiently consented to and authorized by stockholders as required by any provision of law.<sup>2</sup> Whenever, in compliance with any law of New York, the officers of any corporation have made and filed and recorded a certificate that the execution of a mortgage made by their corporation has been duly consented to by stockholders, such certificate is conclusive evidence as to the truth thereof in favor of any and all persons who in good faith receive or purchase for value any bond or obligation purporting to be secured by such mortgage, at any time when such certificate remains of record and uncanceled.<sup>3</sup> Nothing in the statute contained affects any right or any remedy in respect of any such right of any creditor accrued before its enactment.<sup>4</sup>

pany, and not for the purpose of making corporate mortgages improper per se.<sup>5</sup> By the statute requiring the assent of holders of at least two-thirds of a corporation's stock as a condition precedent to a mortgage of its property there is "called into action, the corporation as an artificial entity, the body of the trustees as its agent, and lastly, the constituent members of the corporation or the several individuals composing it. . . . The corporation might become a party to the mortgage, and the trustees direct its officers to execute it; but there must still be the assent of the stockholder. The will of the whole body, expressed by vote or resolution, cannot take its place . . . the corporation cannot assent for the stockholders, neither can one stockholder for another; nor can one who assents on the strength of stock standing in his own name be deemed to represent a proportionate amount of the stock owned by the corporation."<sup>6</sup> It is doubtful if the corporation can raise the point that a mortgage by it lacked the statutory assent of stockholders: certainly it cannot do so while it holds the benefit of any property acquired under the mortgage.<sup>7</sup> The statute requiring assent by stockholders to a mortgage by their corporation does not make a mortgage without such assent improper per se or avoid it if the stockholders treat it as valid, as the statute is intended to protect them only from improvidence or corruption of their officers.<sup>8</sup> For the purposes of the act requiring assent by two-thirds of a corporation's stockholders to mortgage of its property, "the amount actually issued and owned should be regarded as the amount of the capital stock. The design was to confer this power of assent upon those who represented two-thirds of the actual stock."<sup>9</sup> A judgment of foreclosure of corporate property presupposes due assent by the stockholders to the mortgage, in the absence of proof.<sup>10</sup>

poration executed in pursuance of an agreement signed by its trustees who are also all its stockholders is good, even though no previous assent by stockholders to the agreement as required by statute is given; because the assent by the signers binds them in their joint capacities as trustees and stockholders.<sup>16</sup> A corporation owning shares of its own stock, in part transferred to an individual as security for an indebtedness by it to him, cannot by corporate action so give its assent as holder of such shares as to make such assent a part of the assent of holders of two-thirds of its stock to a mortgage by it of its property.<sup>17</sup> It is gravely to be doubted if a motion shown by the minutes of a special meeting of stockholders holding more than two-thirds of the stock that the directors be authorized to borrow a certain sum and secure its payment by the mortgage then before the stockholders, though such minutes be attested by the secretary, is equivalent to the "written assent" of stockholders owning more than two-thirds of the stock of a corporation required by statute to validate such a mortgage; but if it be insufficient neither the individual signing as president of the corporation the mortgage reciting the requisite assent, nor a corporation acquiring the property expressly subject to the mortgage, nor the corporation itself which has absolutely parted with all interest in the mortgaged property, can question its validity for lack of such stockholders' consent.<sup>18</sup> Acquiescence by a stockholder in the issue by his corporation of bonds secured by mortgage (even though not authorized by owners of two-thirds of the corporate capital stock) will be presumed when he has held the stock for twelve years and before then his father held it and refused to buy such bonds when offered to him, and throughout all this time interest has been paid on the bonds and they have appeared on the corporation's annual statements.<sup>19</sup> A mortgage given by a corporation having but two shareholders when an assent thereto, required by statute of stockholders holding at least two-thirds of the stock, is signed, is good.<sup>20</sup>

§ 238. Id.: Filing and Recording of Consent.—The statute requires that the certificate of stockholders' consent to mortgage must be filed and recorded in the office of the clerk or register of the county wherein the corporation has its principal place of business.<sup>1</sup> The filing of an assent by stockholders to a mortgage by their corporation in a wrong county clerk's office by mistake does not invalidate the mortgage as against a subsequent mortgagee with notice.<sup>2</sup> A corporate mortgage given under authority of a statute requiring the written assent of stockholders owning at least two-thirds of the corporation's capital stock to be first filed in the county clerk's office is good as against the company and stockholders if the requisite assent be given before the execution of the mortgage, no rights of creditors intervening, even though, apparently, the consent be not filed till after the mortgage is executed.<sup>3</sup> Certainly this is true if the written assent is signed by all the stockholders before the execution of the mortgage and is filed simultaneously with the filing of the mortgage for record.<sup>4</sup> An assent by stockholders to a mortgage by their corporation of its property filed the same day that the mortgage is will be inferred to have been filed before the mortgage if necessary to sustain the validity of the transaction, as "the reasonable construction of the statute is, that the mortgage is valid from the filing of the assent."<sup>5</sup>

Id.: When Effective.—Bonds of a corporation, though prepared and made complete in form by due execution for the purpose of borrowing money, yet cannot be the subject of attachment nor sale upon execution until delivered by the corporation.<sup>9</sup> “The ordinary mortgage bond of a railroad corporation represents a loan of money from the holder to the borrower. It becomes a valid obligation and must be regarded as having been issued by the corporation when it is actually delivered for a valuable consideration (citation). Although completely executed in due form to be used as security for borrowed money, such bonds acquire no validity before delivery. . . .”<sup>10</sup>

§ 241. Id.: Notice of Irregularity.—A buyer in good faith, for value, of bonds conditioned on their face so as not to become obligatory until authenticated by a certificate endorsed thereon in the signature of a named trustee which bear a forged signature of such trustee is not permitted to compel delivery thereof to him by the obligor of good bonds if he make no inquiry save from his vendor.<sup>11</sup> “The presence of due and unpaid coupons on the bond [of a corporation] is sufficient to put the purchaser on inquiry, but they do not of themselves make the bond to which they are attached dishonored paper.”<sup>12</sup> A bank paying the indebtedness as an individual of an officer of a corporation who owns all but two of its shares and is its secretary and treasurer, on the collateral security of its bonds, represented by such secretary and treasurer to be good and valid securities, and of any irregularity or illegality in the issue whereof it had no notice, is not put upon further inquiry.<sup>13</sup>

§ 244. Id.: Chattel Mortgages.—A corporation may borrow money on a mortgage of its real as well as its personal property.<sup>8</sup> The statutory provision that corporate mortgages other than purchase money mortgages shall be consented to by not less than two-thirds of the stockholders does not apply to a renewal chattel mortgage given by a corporation as transferee of an interest in a lease from an individual containing an obligation, which it assumed, to deliver a new chattel mortgage each year to secure payment of liquidated damages provided for in such lease and of certain personalty as well; because the obligation to renew was part of the purchase price of the chattels.<sup>9</sup> A chattel mortgage assumed by a corporation on buying the chattels covered thereby and which was given by the corporation's vendor as a purchase money mortgage, is not such a mortgage as requires the assent of two-thirds of the corporation's stockholders to validate it.<sup>10</sup> In determining if two-thirds of the stockholders of a corporation give their consent to its chattel mortgage so as to make it valid, "it is the amount of stock actually issued and owned which is taken into account."<sup>11</sup> A corporate mort-

But such a mortgage, as to chattels not in esse when it is executed, is merely an executory contract to give a lien which a court of equity may enforce, as between the parties, when the chattels come into existence, or which the mortgagee may, in some cases, make effective by taking actual possession of the after-acquired property."<sup>14</sup> called for.<sup>17</sup> When a valid, written agreement has been made by one business corporation to give a first mortgage upon its assets for a certain amount and for a specified consideration to another business corporation which has fully performed on its part, an effort by the former corporation to perform its legal obligation by giving the mortgage is binding in equity as against junior judgment creditors even though certain statutory requirements have not been observed.<sup>18</sup> When a mortgage by a corporation to secure the payment of the principal and interest of its bonds, although in terms purporting to include future earnings and products, stipulates that until default the mortgagor shall have the use of the earnings in the conduct of its business, and that upon default the mortgagee may go into possession, exercise the corporate franchises and appropriate the earnings to the payment of the debt secured by the mortgage, the mortgage does not, as against general creditors, operate as a lien upon such earnings until actual entry and possession under the mortgage by the mortgagee.<sup>19</sup> If a trust mortgage require delivery of "any" of the bonds secured thereby to the mortgagor by the trustee at the indefinite and unlimited choice of the mortgagor, the word "any" must be construed "all."<sup>20</sup> To entitle a holder of corporate bonds to exchange them for stock under a provision in the bonds permitting their conversion into stock "at any time within ten days after any dividend shall have been declared and become payable on said preferred stock, upon the delivery . . . of this bond and the unmatured coupons," the bonds must be presented within ten days after a dividend had been declared and become payable, and there must then be unmatured coupons attached thereto: they could not be presented after the bonds had matured and the coupons all been paid.<sup>1</sup> Under a sinking fund provision in a trust mortgage to secure a bond issue that the grantor pay the trustee annually "an amount which shall equal, in the following years [thereafter specified], the following percentages [thereafter also specified] of the entire amounts of bonds

§ 246. Id.: When Negotiable.—" It is undoubtedly the general rule that the bonds of railroad, manufacturing, municipal and other like corporations, payable to bearer, issued for the purpose of securing loans of money, are, in this country, deemed negotiable, and coupons thereto attached partake of the same character (citations). their face an expression showing that they are expected to pass from one person to another, and thus to perform the office of bills and notes or of money, as the words 'bearer,' or 'assigns,' or 'the holder,' or the like,' are negotiable; and blank assignments signed by the payees are sufficient to transfer them.<sup>5</sup>

§ 247. Id.: Principal Due on Default in Interest Payment.—The reasonable construction of a clause in a railroad bond that "in case of default in the payment of any of the interest coupons . . . in the manner provided in the trust deed and mortgage . . . the principal sum . . . shall become due in the manner and with the effect provided in the said trust deed or mortgage" is that the "principal sum of the mortgage debt, upon the failure to pay interest thereon, was not intended to be made payable except in the manner specifically provided by the terms of the mortgage."<sup>6</sup> Under a guaranty by a corporation of payment of the principal and interest of a bond according to its tenor, to wit, that on default of interest the principle might be collected as stipulated in the mortgage, which provided that on a default continuing six months after demand by the trustees in the deed of trust the principal at their election should become immediately collectible from the mortgaged premises, the corporation becomes liable to a bondholder for interest immediately on default in payment thereof, but for principal only when the principal itself becomes due — whatever may be its obligation to the trustees.<sup>7</sup> A holder of a bond guaranteed by a corporation to the extent of punctual payment of principal and interest so that in case of default in payment of principal or any interest the principal should become due at the trustees' election may hold the guarantor corporation liable for the principal as soon as the trustees have elected.<sup>8</sup> A provision for foreclosure of a trust mortgage at the option of the holders of the bonds it secures on default in payment of principal or interest for a stated period does not require that the option be exercised by all bondholders.<sup>9</sup>

§ 249. Id.: Mortgage Trustees, In General.—A mortgage by a corporation, pursuant to statute, of its realty to secure payment of its debts, need not be given to a creditor direct, or a separate mortgage to each creditor, but may be to one person in trust for the benefit of all creditors.<sup>14</sup> If only such bonds are secured by the lien of a trust mortgage as are certified by the trustee, coupons detached therefrom before the bonds are certified, sold or delivered, and before they had any inception as secured obligations, do not come within the protection of the mortgage lien.<sup>15</sup> A mortgagor cannot compel a corporate mortgage trustee to redeem the bonds in any way other than that provided for by agreement so as to accomplish, through a sinking clause provision, a calling in of certain outstanding bonds on a basis less favorable to the holders thereof than if the mortgagor had performed instead of violated his agreement.<sup>16</sup>

§ 250. Id.: Appointment.—An owner and holder of the bonds of a corporation as to the validity of some of which there is question should not be appointed as trustee, particularly if under the mortgage the trustee has certain discretionary powers.<sup>17</sup> A court of equity will not, at the instance of one who represents neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee, nor any of the bondholders under a mortgage, interfere because of any alleged irregularity in its appointment of a corporate trustee as successor to an insolvent corporate trustee when the former is acting at the request of and by the consent of all the parties interested.<sup>18</sup> The Supreme Court, as successor to the Court of Chancery, has power to appoint a successor corporate trustee to a predecessor corporate trustee of a trust mortgage which has become insolvent; and if the appointment be irregular it must be negatived by appeal or motion for rehearing.<sup>19</sup>

§ 251. Id.: Removal.—A good cause of action for the removal of a mortgage trustee is alleged in a complaint showing a judgment of foreclosure and sale (though containing no direction to convey) and refusal of the trustee to convey, if the judgment was later amended so as to direct conveyance by the trustee without notice to the latter till after the amendment was made, provided the trustee then took no action to annul the amendment.<sup>20</sup> The inability of the court to appoint another trustee under a mortgage giving the bondholders power so to do will not deprive it of power to remove the incumbent trustee.<sup>1</sup> A trustee of a corporate mortgage may be removed for consenting to the subordination of the lien of the mortgage to expenditures on the mortgaged property.<sup>2</sup> Some of the holders of corporate trust bonds may for their own benefit and the benefit of the holders of the rest of the bonds sue to remove the trustee, itself a corporation.<sup>3</sup>

the court's direction as to a fund held by it as trustee, and claimed by one person only in hostility to the trust, by making that one only a defendant.<sup>4</sup> A mortgage trustee required by court order to bid on foreclosure "up to" a certain sum may in his discretion bid a larger sum.<sup>5</sup> Although under a trust mortgage the trustee's power to purchase on foreclosure is dependent on the written request of a majority of the bondholders, yet he must be held to have the right to buy, even though no such consent be given, as against a bondholder who intervened in the foreclosure proceedings and secured a court order directing the trustee to bid for the benefit of all bondholders.<sup>6</sup> A mortgage trustee authorized by the mortgage in case of default to form a new corporation for the benefit of the bondholders and reconvey the corporation's property to it, if bought in by him on foreclosure, cannot sell the property bid in by him at all.<sup>7</sup> A trustee may foreclose corporate bonds which are negotiable as though he were the bondholders and has the advantage of the presumption in their favor, from the negotiable character of the bonds, that they were issued for consideration.<sup>8</sup> One of two trustees of a mortgage to secure a series of corporate bonds may sue alone as such to foreclose without asking his co-trustee to join him, and may make the latter a party defendant, if the latter be a director in the company against which it is sought to enforce the mortgage.<sup>9</sup> One claiming to own a temporary receipt exchangeable for a permanent corporate bond cannot enjoin the trustee of the mortgage securing the bonds from delivering any of the permanent bonds to anyone holding a temporary receipt if no one denies that the holders of such receipts are entitled to such bonds.<sup>10</sup>

It is doubtful if a resolution by the board of directors of a corporate trustee of a mortgage is necessary to make valid a notice by its secretary of exercise of option to declare the mortgage principal due; but, if such a notice be insufficient, the institution of suit is certainly sufficient notice of intent to exercise such option.<sup>11</sup> There is nothing in the language of a corporate mortgage, that the trustee shall pay out the proceeds of the bonds only on the order of certain committees or officers of the corporation which "shall include a written statement, or memorandum, declaring the purpose, or purposes, for which the proceeds of said bonds so ordered to be paid over are to be appropriated or used," to warrant an express covenant by the trustee to exact from the committees or officers of the corporation such a statement; but an implied covenant to this effect will be found by a court of equity.<sup>12</sup> It is at least doubtful whether a mortgage trustee which has instituted foreclosure proceedings alleging a proper written request from the bondholders to do so under the terms of the bond, can later maintain the action upon the ground that it was voluntarily commenced by it, if the request was invalid.<sup>13</sup> A corporation organized independently and with a larger capital and additional stockholders than one authorized by a mortgage to be organized by the mortgage trustee to take over the mortgaged property on foreclosure cannot be considered to satisfy the requirements of the mortgage.<sup>14</sup> A court of equity will not tolerate an agreement by which a trustee of a trust mortgage on whom rests the duty of protecting the interests of the bondholders for whose benefit the mortgage was executed and a temporary receiver obligated to preserve the property of his sectui que trust agree with a third party to sell the last named the property secretly and for an inadequate consideration, thereby securing to themselves the benefit of a sale thus conducted at the expense of the parties towards whom they occupied a fiduciary relation.<sup>15</sup>

the mortgagor and whose application has been denied has himself the right to bring the action, as the mortgage securing his bond, though made to the trustee, is really to furnish security for the payment to the bondholder of his money.<sup>13</sup> When a trustee of a trust mortgage is absent from the country or is insane it is not necessary that his refusal to bring action of foreclosure shall be obtained if he is compos mentis, or that a new trustee be appointed if he is non compos mentis, before a bondholder himself may foreclose; because "the bondholders are the real parties in interest; it is their right which is to be redressed, and their loss which is to be prevented; and any emergency which makes a demand upon the trustee futile or impossible, and leaves the right of the bondholder without other reasonable means of redress should justify his appearance as plaintiff in a court of equity for the purpose of a foreclosure."<sup>14</sup> One cannot invoke the statutory provision, that "where there is no answer the judgment shall not be more favorable to the plaintiff than that demanded in the complaint", if he is one of several bondholders represented on foreclosure by a trustee-plaintiff.<sup>15</sup> One delivered a certificate of indebtedness in lieu of a bond secured by a mortgage by a corporation to a trustee, until the bonds are printed, is not deprived of his action to compel delivery of the bond and to foreclose the mortgage on the theory that he has no interest in the mortgage.<sup>16</sup> corporation "contractual obligations of its predecessor which it never assumed."<sup>6</sup> When certain stockholders, on foreclosure of the property of their corporation, avail themselves of the statute permitting them to purchase such property and the corporation's franchises, etc., and go on as a new corporation, and accordingly form a plan to accomplish this result, it is optional with any stockholder to come into the new company under the plan; but if he does not exercise his option within the statutory limitation of time so to do, or such extension of that time as the plan may give him, equity will afford him no relief.<sup>7</sup> Trustees acting under a plan to form a new company on behalf of those interested in a corporation being foreclosed cannot give a stockholder seeking to come in under the plan less than the time specified in the statute.<sup>8</sup> A creditor of an old corporation cannot by suing alone a new corporation, formed solely by the bondholders of the old on its reorganization, reach, to apply to his debt, the proceeds received by the new company from the sale at less than par of its stock to stockholders of the old corporation.<sup>9</sup>

This last act was held to apply to a corporation formed after its enactment to purchase the property of another corporation not subject to the Act's operation.

§ 263. Id.: Setting Sale Aside.—When a complainant has no absolute legal right to have a sale on foreclosure of a corporate mortgage set aside, and it cannot be said that the court below was without discretion to deny the application, or abused its discretion, the Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction to review the order of the court below.<sup>10</sup> An action to set aside as fraudulent a judgment of foreclosure of a corporate mortgage and the consequent sale as fraudulent and collusive cannot be grounded merely on the facts that a director was the one who purchased on foreclosure (because a corporate officer may honestly hold bonds of his corporation and protect his holding by purchase on foreclosure), and that his motives were bad to the knowledge of the mortgage trustee (because what made the foreclosure to result was the default solely).<sup>11</sup>

§ 264. Id.: Practice.— A complaint may properly in one statement combine a cause of action to set aside a mortgage and bill of sale executed by a corporation-defendant to defraud creditors, another cause to set aside a judgment obtained collusively, another cause to enforce the individual liability of the corporation's directors for failure to file an annual report, and a last cause to sequester the corporation's property and divide it among creditors.<sup>12</sup> An injunction against a proposed issue of bonds and reduction of stock cannot be joined with an award for damages for their issue and its reduction.<sup>13</sup> The only proper judgment in an action by one stockholder as representative of all against directors and their corporation to annul as ultra vires an arrangement to exchange debenture mortgage bonds for new securities is that the individual defendants account to the corporation for the damages it has sustained through their illegal acts.<sup>14</sup> A cause of action in equity, as distinguished from one at law, lies for a fraudulent inducement to make an agreement to take bonds in a corporation in consideration of the surrender of stock of its predecessor company and for a complete failure of consideration.<sup>15</sup> An action based on the illegality of a plan to exchange new securities for debenture bonds because of the plan being ultra vires the corporation and of personal interest of the directors in it does not state two causes of action, but only one with two grounds under it.<sup>16</sup> In an action to adjudge void corporate securities all the holders thereof should be parties, either in person or by representation through a trustee or otherwise.<sup>17</sup>

§ 265. Directors, Officers and Agents; Directors, De Facto and De Jure.—"The de facto doctrine is one of those legal makeshifts by which unlawful or irregular corporate and public acts are legalized for certain purposes on the score of necessity. It 'was introduced into the law,' said Chief Judge Butler in the leading case of State v. Carroll (32 Conn. 449), 'as a matter of policy and necessity, to protect the interests of the public and individuals, where those interests were involved in the official acts of persons exercising the duties of an office, without being lawful officers.' The reason of the rule upon which this policy is founded is stated to be that 'third persons, from the nature of the case, cannot always investigate the right of one assuming to hold an important office, even so far as to see that he has color of title to it by virtue of some appointment or election. If they see him publicly exercising its authority, if they ascertain that this is generally acquiesced in, they are entitled to treat him as such officer, and, if they employ him as such, should not be subjected to the danger of having his acts collaterally called in question.' (Citations.) And the reason of this rule of necessity would seem to imply that 'if the title of the assumed officer be directly assailed by the State, in a proper proceeding, it will be necessary for him to show himself something more than an officer in fact,' so that when an assumed officer undertakes to enforce in a direct proceeding 'rights which belong only to an officer de jure, it may be necessary for him to show himself to be such.'"<sup>1</sup> Directors or trustees of a corporation elected to fill vacancies by the votes of others who assumed to act as such but who were themselves disqualified to hold the office (because they did not bona fide hold stock) are directors de facto as to the public and third persons dealing with the corporation; but as between themselves and the corporation were never directors or trustees either in fact or in law.<sup>2</sup> A transfer of stock to an individual and his election as director as successor to his transferrer make him a director de facto and warrant him as such in joining in a petition for dissolution of the corporation so as to give the court jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding.<sup>3</sup> "The three original directors [named in the certificate of incorporation and not, therefore, stockholders], were directors de jure, clothed with all the powers of the corporation and authorized to make any contract in its behalf that it was capable of making.”<sup>4</sup>

§ 266. Id.: Election, Governing Statutes.—The statutes governing the election of directors are considered in the immediately following sections, except such as do not fit the particular subject matter of such sections, respectively, and those are considered here. By-laws duly adopted at a meeting of the members of a corporation control the action of its directors; and no by-law adopted by the board of directors regulating the election of directors or officers is valid unless published for at least once a week for two successive weeks in a newspaper in the county where the election is to be held, and at least thirty days before such election.<sup>5</sup> Every corporation has power to make by-laws not inconsistent with any existing law prescribing the manner of the appointment of the inspectors of election.<sup>6</sup>

§ 267. Id.: In General.—Surprise and fraud upon the part of the electors at a corporate meeting are sufficient to avoid an election.<sup>7</sup> “The election of an unqualified person to a corporate office is merely voidable and not void.”<sup>8</sup> When the only method of electing an officer to a corporate board is, by its charter, the vote of a majority of his co-officers, and no such majority is present at his election, he has no title to the office, and the fact that the board later recognized him as one of its members and elected him to an office which only a member could hold does not make him any the more an officer.<sup>9</sup> One present at a first election of directors who then voted and was then elected a director cannot later object that no notice was given of the first election of directors.<sup>10</sup> An election taking place under the appointment and authority of but one inspector is void if the statute uses the plural word “inspectors.”<sup>11</sup> A statute exempting manufacturing corporations from the provisions of a law providing for a summary application and order for the establishment of a corporate election, or for a new election, etc., relates simply to form and may be retroactive, as the remedy for testing the corporate election still remains, though not in the summary form provided by the law.<sup>12</sup> To an action to restrain a corporation from permitting votes to be cast at a forthcoming election on certain shares of its stock the holders thereof must be made parties; certainly if it be not certain that they will be directors when the injunction is granted as they are when the action is begun.<sup>13</sup>

§ 268. Id.: Time, Place and Notice.—Directors of every stock corporation are to be chosen at the time and place fixed by the by-laws of the corporation by a plurality of the votes at such election.<sup>14</sup> Notice of the time and place of holding any election of directors must be either published at least once in each week for two successive weeks immediately preceding such election, in a newspaper published in the county where such election is to be held or delivered personally or mailed, not less than ten nor more than twenty days before the election, to each person who appears on the books of the corporation as a stockholder; if mailed, it must be directed to a stockholder at his address as it appears on such books; and the by-laws may require such notice to be published and also mailed or delivered as above provided.<sup>15</sup> No by-law adopted by the board of directors regulating the election of directors is valid unless published for at least once a week for two successive weeks in a newspaper in the county where the election is to be held, and at least thirty days before such election.<sup>16</sup> If the election has not been held on the day designated in the by-laws or by law the directors must forthwith call a meeting of the members of the corporation for the purpose of electing directors, giving notice thereof in the same manner as notice is given of the annual meeting for the election of directors; and if such meeting is not so called within one month or if, though held, it results in a failure to elect directors, any member of the corporation may call a meeting for the purpose of electing directors by publishing a notice of the time and place of holding such meeting at least once in each week for two successive weeks immediately preceding the election in a newspaper published in the county where following year of the day on which the first election was held, if that be a legal day.<sup>2</sup> A statute requiring annual elections of directors is not inoperative because no by-law has been adopted regulating the manner of holding such elections, pursuant to a statute requiring such a by-law to be passed.<sup>3</sup> The statutory provision that if an election of directors is not held on the day designated, the president must notify and cause an election of directors to be held within sixty days thereafter is imperative, and on failure so to do, mandamus may properly be resorted to; and that a corporation is incorporated under a general law, which provides that in such event it shall be lawful to hold such an election in such manner as shall be provided for by the corporate by-laws, does not make it the less subject to the general statutory provision in question.<sup>4</sup>

§ 269. Id.: Method of.—Directors of every stock corporation are to be chosen at the time and place fixed by the by-laws of the corporation by a plurality of the votes at such election; and vacancies in the board of directors are to be filled in the manner prescribed in the by-laws; and at least one-fourth in number of the directors of every stock corporation must be elected annually.<sup>5</sup> If the number of directors of a stock corporation is increased pursuant to law the additional directors authorized by such increase must be elected by the votes of a majority of the directors in office at the time of the increase.<sup>6</sup> The statute provides for (1) the appointment, (2) the compensation and (3) the oath of inspectors of the election of directors. (1) Inspectors of election of every stock corporation must be appointed in the manner prescribed in the by-laws, except that the inspectors of the first election of directors (and of all previous meetings of the stockholders) must be appointed by the board of directors named in the certificate of incorporation, and except, further, that if any inspector refuses to serve or neglects to attend at the election or his office becomes vacant, the meeting may appoint an inspector in his place unless the by-laws otherwise provide.<sup>7</sup> (2) Each inspector is entitled to a reasonable compensation

His acceptance could be shown by conduct on his part indicating an intention to accept the office, and might be implied from circumstances.”<sup>11</sup>

§ 274. Id.: Tenure of Office, Holding Over.—If the directors are not elected on the day designated in the by-laws, or by law, the corporation is not for that reason dissolved; but every director continues to hold his office and discharge his duties until his successor has been elected.<sup>12</sup> “At common law, a director holding over after the end of his term became an officer de facto, and as such he could do acts binding the corporation (citation). § 275. Id.: Termination of Directorship.—The law permits the division in a certificate of incorporation of the directors of the corporation into two or more classes whose terms of office shall respectively expire at different times.<sup>17</sup> In the absence of the election of his successor by the stockholders, a director of a corporation has two methods by which he may cease to be such: “First, by resigning the office, which he could at any time do, and, second, by an absolute sale of all of his stock.”<sup>18</sup> A corporate trustee need give no public notice, or notice to anyone save his associates, of intent to resign, or actual resignation.<sup>19</sup> No acceptance or entry in the minutes of a director’s resignation is needed to make it effective.<sup>20</sup> Although by the general rule of law directors elected annually for the term of one year under the corporate charter, which does not, however, contain any provision as to their holding over until their successors are elected, may so hold over; “yet there is no rule which compels them to do so, and where . . . a director sells out all of his stock in a corporation and ceases to take any part in the management of its affairs or the meetings of its directors, he is not bound to see that a successor is elected in his place or to tender any formal resignation.”<sup>1</sup> A director of a corporation the by-laws of which provide that its directors shall serve for one year and until such time as their successors are chosen continues such after his resignation has been received if no successor has been chosen, so that service upon him of process is good service on the corporation.<sup>2</sup> “. . . in the absence of any specific statutory authority and in the absence of provisions in the articles of incorporation or in by-laws duly adopted by the stockholders of the corporation providing therefor, the board of directors of a business corporation . . . has no power to expel from the board of directors a fellow-director, and hence, no power to aggrieved to have the Supreme Court inquire into a corporate election under the statutory authority vested in the court to make such inquiry is not made invalid by the joining of another party in the petition without authority.<sup>9</sup> A statute authorizing a proceeding to compel a new election of directors of a corporation by any person that may "be aggrieved by, or complain of" any election, "does not mean that any person whomsoever who chooses to make a complaint may institute the proceeding, but it must be some person whose rights have been infringed, and who is justly entitled to complain." The statute permitting the Supreme Court to give relief against an improper corporate election on the petition of a person aggrieved does not authorize one not showing that he or his assignor was a stockholder at the time of the election complained of to seek relief under it.<sup>10</sup> The necessity which exists in a proceeding to set aside an election of a corporate director, on the ground that he did not receive the necessary number of votes, of showing that the one seeking to annul the election has been injured by the result, does not exist when the ground of the application is that no director at all could be elected because the corporation had no proper constitution and by-laws providing for directors.<sup>11</sup> The statute requiring notice of a proceeding to review the election of corporate directors to be given "to the adverse party, or to those to be affected thereby" is satisfied by notice to the corporation itself and the directors whose election is challenged.<sup>12</sup> A statute intended to give relief to establish an election already had or to set aside such an election and order a new one does not permit mandamus to compel inspectors of election to count votes they have refused to count.<sup>13</sup> A summary inquiry by the Supreme Court, pursuant to statute, into the validity of corporate elections is not an action and is inappropriate for determining equitable claims or questions not necessarily involved in deciding the primary question.<sup>14</sup> A stockholder has no standing in court when seeking to enjoin a person, a de facto director, under color of an election, from acting as such, and to command the recognition of another person whose resignation, under color of the action of the board, has been accepted; for a court of equity will not determine the title to office of a director of a corporation.<sup>15</sup> A determination by the court in a proceeding under the statute to determine the right of individuals to act as directors of a corporation which depended on their ownership of its stock is not conclusive as an adjudication of their right to the shares of stock in another action involving title to such stock.<sup>16</sup> The court adjudicating upon a special proceeding to review the validity of an election of directors cannot in such proceeding decide that proceedings to revoke an attempted settlement with a subscriber to the corporation's stock was in violation of its previous order.<sup>17</sup> Although it seems proper for the court to appoint a referee to take testimony and report with his opinion in a proceeding to inquire summarily into the validity of a corporate election, yet the order of appointment is not appealable.<sup>18</sup>

An action may be maintained against one or more trustees, directors, managers or other officers of a corporation to procure a judgment for the purpose of suspending a defendant from exercising his office where it appears that he has abused his trust; or of removing a defendant from his office upon proof or conviction of misconduct and directing a new election to be held by the body or board duly authorized to hold the same, in order to supply the vacancy created by the removal; or, where there is no such body or board, or where all the members thereof are removed, directing the removal to be reported to the Governor who may, with the advice and consent of the senate, fill the vacancies.<sup>19</sup> The court must, upon the application of either party, make an order directing the trial by jury of the issue of neglect or failure of defendants to perform their duties; and for that purpose the questions to be tried must be prepared and settled as prescribed in section nine hundred and twenty of the Code of Civil Procedure.<sup>20</sup>

The Attorney-General may maintain an action upon either his own information or the complaint of a private person against a person who usurps, intrudes into or unlawfully holds or exercises within the State an office in a domestic corporation.<sup>8</sup> In such action the Attorney-General, besides stating the cause of action in the complaint, may in his discretion set forth therein the name of the person rightfully entitled to the office and the facts showing his right thereto, and obtain an order from the court or judge to arrest the defendant upon proof by affidavit that the defendant by means of his usurpation or intrusion has received fees or emoluments belonging to the office.<sup>9</sup> The statute, hereinafter quoted, provides that the portion of the Code of Civil Procedure governing arrest applies in general to the order of arrest and the proceedings thereon; that judgment in the action may determine the right of the defendant and relator or the defendant only; that the action is triable as of right by a jury; that on rendition of judgment for the relator he may execute his office after taking oath and giving bond, and receive the books and papers from the defendant; that relator may recover his damages from defendant for the latter's usurpation of office; that any number of persons claiming title to the same office may be sued in one action by the Attorney-General; that a temporary injunction against defendant may be had in certain cases and a final one in others; that the plea of incrimination will not avail a witness; and that final judgment may oust the defendant, subject him to costs, and a fine.<sup>10</sup> The remedy of one alleging that he has been ousted from his office as director of a corporation and that another in possession of that office as his successor holds it unlawfully is not by mandamus but by action by the Attorney-General either upon his own information or the complaint of a private person under the nineteen hundred and forty-eighth section of the Code, in the nature of a quo

Unless otherwise provided a majority of the board of directors of a corporation at a meeting duly assembled is necessary to constitute a quorum for the transaction of business and the act of a majority of the directors present at a meeting at which a quorum is present is the act of the board of directors.<sup>14</sup> Whenever under the provisions of any of the corporate laws a corporation is authorized to take any action by the agreement or action of its directors, managers or trustees, such agreement or action may be taken by such directors, regularly convened as a board, and acting by a majority of a quorum, except when otherwise expressly required by law or the by-laws of the corporation; and any such agreement shall be executed in behalf of the corporation by such officers as shall be designated by the board of directors, managers or trustees.<sup>15</sup> At any meeting at which every member of the board of directors is present, though held without notice, any business may be transacted which might have been transacted if the meeting had been duly called.<sup>16</sup> Except when otherwise required by law or the by-laws of the corporation, special meetings of the members of the corporation may be called in the same manner as the annual meeting thereof.<sup>17</sup> "It is not absolutely essential to the validity of a corporate act that the trustees of a corporation should proceed according to any particular form. If all are present, or have received due notice of the proposed meeting, action taken by them, intended to be a corporate act, although informally expressed, is as valid as if it had been surrounded by all the formalities usual and, it may be said, desirable in such cases. The law looks to the substance rather than to the form of things."<sup>18</sup> Directors or trustees of a corporation cannot vote at a meeting of the board by proxy.<sup>19</sup> The statutory mandate that the action of a majority of a board of directors at a lawful meeting shall be the act of the board, unless otherwise provided, permits a by-law demanding unanimity by the directors to do certain things.<sup>20</sup> The action of a quorum of a corporation's board of directors in which several directors participated who were disqualified, either because they were but de facto directors

§ 279. Id.: Salaries.—"It is the general rule that a director, assuming office as such without any agreement as to compensation, is presumed to render his official services gratuitously; for he assumes thereby, in a sense, a trust relation towards the company, and it would be against sound policy to permit him to assert claims for services which were within the line of his duties. But, when he is employed to perform services for the benefit of the corporation which are not within that line, there is not the same reason for denying him the right to be compensated. So far from there being any objection to the employment by a board of directors of one of their number, as their agent to do something in the interest and for the benefit of the corporation which, collectively, it would be impossible, or inconvenient, for them to do, it may often happen, from the nature of the business to be done, or in the situation of affairs, that it is, essentially, preferable and advantageous to do so."<sup>9</sup> A corporate director is not entitled to compensation for services performed by him as such unless he has a pre-existing provision expressly giving him the right thereto; and if rendered without any intent of compensation he cannot get payment therefor on the theory of an implied promise to pay therefor.<sup>10</sup> No presumption of a promise by a corporation to pay a director for his services arises from the mere fact of their rendition, or to pay an officer beyond the salary provided him by the corporate by-laws.<sup>11</sup> Directors certainly have no power to vote increases of salary (whether disguised as extra dividends or not) to themselves for services already performed under a stipulated salary: whether they have authority, in the absence of some provision of statute, by-law or charter, to vote salaries to each other as mere incidents of their office is extremely doubtful; and a resolution by them voting themselves salaries both for services already performed and services to be performed, resting in each case on the same basis, will be held tainted with fraud and wholly void.<sup>12</sup> An increase in the salaries of officers of a corporation brought about by the necessary vote of the officers themselves as directors and stockholders is voidable, not void; and a stockholder and director who knew thereof and voted against the increases but in no other way ever objected for a number of years cannot complain of the salaries if they are not improper.<sup>13</sup> A stockholder in his individual and representative capacity may make majority directors account for salaries voted themselves in excess of the amount stipulated in contracts for their services to the corporation.<sup>14</sup> Directors of a corporation cannot bind its stockholders to salaries voted to their own number when those directors getting the salaries participate in the board meeting at which they are voted.<sup>15</sup> An agreement to pay a director a salary as president, voted at a board meeting in which he participated and at which he presided, is voidable only, and the corporation must set up in its answer to his complaint for such salary the facts showing bad faith, if it claims it exists, and cannot have a dismissal of the complaint upon the sole ground of such participation and presiding.<sup>16</sup> Corporate officers or directors cannot vote themselves salaries for services of which there is no proof but which are accepted by themselves for their corporation.<sup>17</sup> Salaries paid officers of a corporation must ordinarily be corrected within itself and may be ratified by a majority of the stockholders; but not salaries paid directors as such by their own action.<sup>18</sup> " . . . where the by-laws of a business corporation provide that the salary or compensation of its officers may be fixed by the board of directors an adoption of such by-law does not deprive the court of its equitable jurisdiction to inquire into the reasonableness of the salaries voted by the directors, and . . . a minority stockholder in a representative action is entitled to a decree requiring the directors to return to the treasury all sums received by them in excess of reasonable compensation for the services they rendered."<sup>19</sup> A resolution by a board of directors authorizing a committee "to employ counsel to assist them in whatever action they may decide necessary" is broad enough to authorize an action by the corporation against some of its directors for wasting its assets; and, if it be not, the action is against the interest of the corporation of which he is a director. If a profit is made in a transaction that is honest in itself, and is open and fully disclosed, and the transaction is consummated after an honest statement of the facts to the board of directors at a meeting, and to the stockholders at a stockholders' meeting, there is no reason for criticism or for charging such director with any profits that he may make."<sup>5</sup> The invalidity of dealings by corporate officers and directors with corporate property "is founded upon the unwillingness of the law to uphold contracts which bring into collision the trust duty and the personal interest, and it is because of that collision, and the temptations which surround it, that it declares the contract voidable at the election of the beneficiary without investigating the good or bad faith of the trustee. The entire basis of the rule consists in this collision between trust duty and personal interest, and the equitable prohibition has no application where there is no such possible inconsistency. There is no such conflict in the ordinary case of the purchase by a director in a going corporation of its outstanding obligations. . . . Unless some special fund has been provided, or some special liquidation has been ordered, the director owes no duty to his company to discharge or buy in the outstanding bonds, and may purchase for himself because no inconsistent trust duty has arisen. . . . we are asked to crowd the rule almost to the verge of an absurdity . . . by tainting with invalidity the holding by a director of the unmatured obligations of the corporation bought by him in the open market and not put in liquidation or sought to be extinguished."<sup>6</sup> "A contract entered into by a corporation by the authority or direction of its trustees, with themselves, and for their benefit, or a transfer of its property by the authority of the trustees to themselves, may be set aside, in case it injures any public interest, or the private interest of any shareholder or creditor, even though the contract or transfer was executed in good faith by the trustees (cita-

That a voidable contract with a firm of which three members are directors in the corporation which is the other party thereto is amended by a meeting of five directors, of whom three were those members of such firm, so as to be more favorable to that company, is no reason for avoiding it after the contract has been fully performed by the firm.<sup>20</sup> A director employed by his corporation under a contract for a term of years prepared by himself, approved by the executive committee, signed by the officers at such committee's direction, and approved at a board meeting at which the director employed was present, is liable to have his employment under the contract terminated at any time by the board, and has the burden of showing that the employment under the contract was necessary, was for duties distinct from his duties as director and that his services were worth the amount paid therefor.<sup>1</sup> A contract by a director with his corporation will not be set aside at the instance of its stockholders if to do work already agreed to be done by another at but a slightly greater cost and if otherwise no one could in all probability have been secured to do the work.<sup>2</sup> An agent, director or officer of a corporation who is secretly a partner with another to whom he has work of the corporation sent to do must account to the corporation for any profits he made in such partnership.<sup>3</sup> Directors of a corporation cannot pay one of their number a sum agreed upon as to be paid him on cancellation of a contract made by it with him because of consolidation by it with another corporation until the stockholders shall have voted in favor of the consolidation.<sup>4</sup> A contract by which one is induced to invest money in another's business for the considerations that it be incorporated, that the investor receive stock in the corporation and that the inducer agree to buy the investor's stock at its book value if the corporation did not employ the investor at a stated salary for a specified time, is not void as against public policy because the inducer becomes a director of the corporation and it may, therefore, obligate him as director to act against the corporation's best interests if they require a termination of the contract.<sup>5</sup> A contract of indemnity by a corporation with its

§ 283. Id.: Executive Committee.— “ The board of directors of a corporation do not stand in the same relation to the corporate body which a private agent holds toward his principal. In the strict relation of principal and agent, all the authority of the latter is derived by delegation from the former, and if the power of substitution is not conferred in the appointment, it cannot exist at all. But in corporate bodies the powers of the board of directors are, in a very important sense, original and undelegated. The stockholders do not confer, nor can they revoke those powers. They are derivative only in the sense of being received from the State in the act of incorporation. The directors convened as a board are the primary possessors of all the powers which the charter confers, and like private principals they may delegate to agents of their own appointment the performance of any acts which they themselves can perform. . . . the by-law in question . . . was, in substance and effect, a regulation which constituted a subordinate agency to conduct the ordinary business of the corporation. The persons composing the agency would change according as the quorum of five or more directors attending the meeting might be constituted of different individuals. <sup>17</sup> Young v. U. S. Mortgage & Trust Co., 214 N. Y. 279, 108 N. E. 418 (1915), holding that: "If an officer or employee of a corporation is called before its board of directors or a duly authorized committee and informed by one of their number that they have decided to make a stated increase in his salary to induce him to continue in the service of the corporation and he assents to the proposition and acts upon it, it is not essential that the agreement be reduced to writing or embodied in a formal resolution."

not involve a delegation of the discretion of the directors.<sup>17</sup> Although a settlement of points of difference between two corporations pursuant to an agreement between their respective boards of directors is voidable at the election of the stockholders of one of such corporations on the ground that the majority of its directors were also directors in the other corporation, yet such right to avoid a contract made by common directors is in the corporation and not in minority stockholders; so that if it be ratified by the majority of the stockholders, without fraud or the like, the minority has no complaint to make.<sup>18</sup> The statutory commission to directors of the management of a corporation cannot be controlled by an agreement between the officers while acting as such that each shall have a salary for a term of years and that the profits shall be distributed in a certain way, irrespective of the stock held by them.<sup>20</sup> Directors cannot, against the protest of minority stockholders, do an act which changes the nature of the corporation's business so as effectually to destroy it for all the purposes for which it was formed, particularly if they ultimately personally benefit by this exercise of their trust powers.<sup>1</sup> Directors seeking by majority vote to settle a dispute as to ownership of stock which exists between two stockholders will be enjoined from carrying their plan into execution.<sup>2</sup> A director of one corporation cannot cancel a debt owing to it by another corporation though the latter be composed of three officers of the former in their individual capacity.<sup>3</sup> When neither statute nor by-law regulating the subject is shown, the power of a corporation to make a general assignment resides in its directors; but a resolution by the latter "that the company execute a general assignment" gives the president, as executive officer, power to carry the resolution into effect.<sup>4</sup> It is not within the apparent scope of trustees of a corporation organized for manufacturing pur-

§ 286. Id.: Real Estate.—It is within the power of a board to give the corporation's president the power to purchase property as part of its legitimate business and to give the company's obligation in payment for it.<sup>13</sup> The directors of a corporation organized to acquire and hold by purchase, lease or otherwise, mineral land and other real property, and to mine, transport and dispose of the mineral and other products of such lands, may lease its property at a fixed rent, in order to develop the property, instead of operating it directly; and in the absence of fraud the stockholders cannot insist that their consent be obtained to such lease.<sup>14</sup>

§ 287. Id.: Actions, Service of Process, Counsel Fees.—The service of process in actions against corporations is generally discussed in the four hundred and forty-third section of this book. The verification of pleadings in corporate actions is generally discussed in the four hundred and forty-first section of this book. Although an attorney retained by a director to bring an action for him against an agent or officer of the corporation who has misappropriated its money has no statutory lien on the cause of action and recovery, yet, if the director agree that the attorney have a lien on the cause of action and recovery, the courts will enforce this contractual lien; because the director, as trustee, had a lien on the recovery which he could transfer to the attorney.<sup>15</sup> "As a general principle, trustees of a corporation whose corporate existence is attacked, should be afforded the means of resisting such attack, so far as the facts justify and their duty demands. . . . But the claim of the trustees to be protected in the defense of the corporation they represent, or that of their counsel to be paid out of the fund for opposing the appointment of a receiver, however just it may be, is not an absolute right which can be enforced by an action in their behalf against the receiver, but is a matter to be addressed to the sound discretion of the court in which the proceeding is pending, and such discretion should be exercised in that proceeding, and as part thereof, and upon a consideration of all the of corporation as affecting right to enforce contract against corporation, see note in 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 467.

§ 288. Id.: Liabilities, In General.—The legality of the acts of directors of a corporation are to be determined by the laws of the state of its incorporation.<sup>19</sup> The acts of a board of directors must be judged in the light of appearances existing when they acted.<sup>20</sup> Directors are not liable for mere errors of judgment, whether as to law or facts, if they act without corrupt intent.<sup>1</sup> Directors of a corporation are not liable for errors of judgment.<sup>2</sup> The mere fact that one is a trustee of a corporation does not make him chargeable with actual knowledge of its business transactions and of the entries made on its books.<sup>3</sup> “. . . each director is only liable for his own acts or omissions, and that one is not liable for the acts or omissions of another unless he participated therein to the injury of the corporation, or had some knowledge by which in the exercise of reasonable care he could have prevented the loss or connived at it, or failed to perform his duty of exercising the authority he possessed to prevent losses which should, in the exercise of reasonable care and skill, have been foreseen and guarded against (citations). § 289. Id. For Unauthorized Dividends.—The directors of a stock corporation must not make dividends except from the surplus profits arising from the business of such corporation; and in case of any violation of this provision the directors under whose administration dividends may have been so made, except those who may have caused their dissent therefrom to be entered at large upon the minutes of such directors at the time or who were not present when the dividends were made, are jointly and severally liable to such corporation and its creditors to the full amount of any loss sustained by such corporation or its creditors by reason of such making of dividends.<sup>2</sup> But the statutory prohibition against making dividends except from surplus profits does not prevent a division and distribution of the assets of the corporation remaining after the payment of all its debts and liabilities upon the dissolution of such corporation or the expiration of its charter; nor does it prevent a corporation from accepting shares of its capital stock in complete or partial settlement of a debt owing to the corporation which by its board of directors is deemed bad or doubtful.<sup>3</sup> A director of a stock corporation is guilty of a misdemeanor who concurs in any vote or act of the directors of such corporation, or any of them, by which it is intended to make a dividend, except from the surplus profits arising from the business of the corporation, and in the cases and manner allowed by law.<sup>4</sup> A director of a corporation, i. e., any person having by law the direction or management of the affairs of a corporation by whatever name described, is deemed to have such a knowledge of the affairs of the corporation as to enable him to determine whether any act, proceeding or omission of its directors is a violation of the provision of law just stated.<sup>5</sup> A director is deemed to have concurred in the violation of such provision of law either if present at a meeting of the directors at which

The statute precluding dividends save from surplus profits and reduction of capital stock makes directors violating it liable only for the loss sustained by the corporation or its creditors from the declaration and payment of dividends and not for the full amount of such dividends should they exceed such loss.<sup>7</sup> Directors owning all the stock of the corporation may distribute its surplus profits as salaries to themselves if they be guilty of no fraud.<sup>8</sup> Ignorance of the financial condition of his corporation is no protection to a director from liability for declaring dividends when its net earnings do not justify them; and the account books of the corporation, particularly its ledger, are admissible evidence of such financial condition.<sup>9</sup> Trustees are liable for a debt of the company under a statute making them so on declaration of dividends from capital if they transfer all its stock, practically, to an individual while a debt of the company is still outstanding.<sup>10</sup> Trustees liable for corporate debts by reason of decreasing the capital stock by dividends are not responsible for the costs of a judgment for the debt had by the creditor against the company.<sup>11</sup> "The object of the statute [making trustees individually liable for a debt due by their corporation if they declare and pay to its stockholders a dividend diminishing

§ 290. Id.: For Dividing, Withdrawing, Paying or Reducing Capital Stock.—The directors of a stock corporation must not divide, withdraw or in any way pay to the stockholders or any of them any part of the capital of such corporation, or reduce its capital stock, except as authorized by law.<sup>14</sup> In case of any violation of the prohibition, against dividing, withdrawing, in any way paying to stockholders any of a corporation's capital stock or reducing it except as authorized by law, the directors under whose administration it may have happened, except those who may have caused their dissent therefrom to be entered at large upon the minutes of such directors at the time or were not present when it happened, are jointly and severally liable to the corporation and its creditors to the full amount of any loss sustained by it or them respectively by reason of such withdrawal, division or reduction.<sup>15</sup> But such prohibition does not prevent a division and distribution of the assets of any such corporation remaining after the payment of all its debts and liabilities upon the dissolution of such corporation or the expiration of its charter; nor prevent a corporation from accepting shares of its capital stock in complete or partial settlement of a debt owing to the corporation which is deemed bad or doubtful by its board of directors.<sup>16</sup> A director of a stock corporation is guilty of a misdemeanor who concurs in any vote or act of the directors of such corporation, or any of them, by which it is intended to divide, withdraw, or in any manner pay to the

§ 291. Id.: For Assenting to Indebtedness Beyond Capital.—There used to be a liability imposed by statute on directors for consenting to an indebtedness by their corporation in an amount exceeding its capital; but this liability no longer exists. The cases collected in the note were decided under the repealed statute.<sup>20</sup> The statutes do, however, provide that no corporation formed pursuant to the statute, permitting a

On right to injunction against reduction of capital stock of corporation, see note in 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 571.

<sup>20</sup> The statutory provision making corporate directors personally liable for a corporate debt in excess of its paid up capital stock "imposes a liability upon the trustees, creating or assenting to debts in excess of the capital, to the extent of such excess, not for the benefit of any particular creditor, but for the benefit of all, and their liability is in equity a fund to which all the creditors may resort for the satisfaction of such debts as the corporation itself fails to pay, to be shared in by all in proportion to the debt remaining unpaid. It follows that it must be enforced in equity in a suit where all the creditors and the corporation itself are parties, or represented, where an accounting can be had, all the facts ascertained and the equities adjusted. The liability is secondary, to be resorted to only after the usual remedies against the cor-corporation upon its formation or reorganization to make provision in its certificate of incorporation for the issuance of shares of stock (other than preferred stock having a preference as to principal) without any nominal or par value, can incur any debts until the amount of capital stated in such certificate has been fully paid in money or in property taken at poration itself have been exhausted;" it is not primary and contractual as is the liability of a stockholder for debts created before the capital stock is paid in. National Bank v. Dillingham, 147 N. Y. 603, 42 N. E. 338 (1895); St. Corp. L. § 24. A creditor bringing a representative action against directors of his corporate debtor to enforce their personal liability because of increase in their régime of the corporate debts above its paid-up capital need not be a judgment-creditor if he was enjoined by an injunction operative when his action was brought from obtaining a judgment against the corporation. Whitney v. Pugh, 58 A. D. 316, 68 N. Y. Supp. 992 (1901); St. Corp. L. § 24 (L. 1892, c. 688). An action against directors consenting to the creation of an indebtedness by their corporation which brings its total indebtedness not secured by mortgage to a sum in excess of the amount of its paid-up capital stock to enforce their personal liability for such indebtedness to the corporation's creditors may and should be brought by one creditor as representative of himself and all other creditors against all the directors liable to contribute to the creditor's fund. Whitney v. Pugh, 58 A. D. 316, 68 N. Y. Supp. 992 (1901); St. Corp. L. § 24 (L. 1892, c. 688): ". . . otherwise that fund cannot be properly constituted, unless indeed it be held that a multiplicity of suits will lie to establish one fund, and that in a case where the personnel of the directorship has changed from year to year, a creditor suing for himself and all other creditors can only bring his action to realize a part of the fund, viz., that to be drawn from the liability of one set of directors who were such when the indebtedness to the particular creditor instituting the action arose." In seeking to hold a director personally liable for consenting to the creation of any debt of his corporation whereby its total indebtedness not secured by mortgage shall exceed the amount of its paid-up capital stock, it must be remembered that "it is the creation of a debt not secured by mortgage in excess of the paid-up capital stock which makes the directors liable, but not a debt which is secured by mortgage." Irving National Bank v. Moynihan, 84 A. D. 301, 82 N. Y. Supp. 705 (1903); St. Corp. L. § 24 (L. 1892, c. 688). "The liability imposed by statute upon directors for such indebtedness of their corporation not secured by mortgage as exceeds its paid-up capital stock must be enforced in a suit in equity for the benefit of all creditors to which they and the corporation are parties, and if several actions have been brought by different plaintiffs against the same directors and all the plaintiffs are represented by the same attorney, the plaintiffs should be compelled to elect in which of the actions they shall proceed, and proceedings in all the other actions should be stayed until the further order of the court, to the end that when judgment has been recovered in the action in which the election has been made, the plaintiffs in those actions, as well as the other creditors, may come in and prove their claims in that action, and the rights and liabilities of all parties be determined therein." American Grocery Co. v. Flint, 5 A. D. 263, 39 N. Y. Supp. 1 (1896). A statute making trustees of a corporation who assent its actual value, and that, if the amount of capital stated in such certificate is increased, the corporation cannot increase the amount of its indebtedness then existing until it has received in money or property the amount of such increase of its stated capital; and that the directors of the corporation assenting to the creation of any debt in violation of such statutory prohibition are liable jointly and severally for such debt, though no action can be brought on such liability unless within one year after the debt has been incurred the creditor has served upon the director written notice of intention to hold him personally liable for such debt; but any director who because of such liability pays any debt of the corporation is subrogated to all rights of the creditor in respect thereof against the corporation and its property and is also entitled to contribution from all other directors of the corporation similarly liable for the same debt, and the personal representative of any such director who has died before making such contribution.<sup>20a</sup> The statute further provides that a corporation organized under any general law which is reorganized so as to permit of its issuing non-par value stock cannot incur any debts subsequent to the filing of the certificate of reorganization until it has assets of an actual value at least equal to the amount of capital stated in such certificate of reorganization as that with which it will carry on business; and that the directors of a corporation assenting to the creation of a debt in violation of such statutory provision are jointly and severally liable for such debt in like manner as directors of a corporation obtaining non-par value stock as prescribed in the last sentence.<sup>20b</sup>

§ 292. Id.: For Permitting Payment for Corporation's Stock by Unauthorized Means.—A director of a stock corporation is guilty of a misdemeanor who concurs in any vote or act of

to an increase of its indebtedness over the amount of its capital stock personally liable for such excess to the creditors of the company makes them liable only to such creditors to whom the company owes such excess, and not to creditors to whom it does not owe it. Patterson v. Robinson, 37 Hun, 341 (1885); L. 1848, c. 40, § 23. In determining whether the indebtedness of a corporation exceeds the amount of its capital stock so as to make its directors creating the indebtedness individually liable to creditors for the excess, under the statute, bonds of the corporation not shown to have been issued or to have reached the hands of creditors cannot be included, nor can a judgment against the corporation predicated on advances made by a director; and, in any event, all the directors at fault must be joined as defendants. McClave v. Thompson, 36 Hun, 365 (1885); L. 1875, c. 611, § 22.

§ 293. Id.: On Corporate Dissolution.—Upon the dissolution of any corporation its directors are trustees for its creditors, stockholders or members, unless others be appointed by legislature or court; and are jointly and severally personally liable to its creditors, stockholders or members to the extent of the corporate property and effects which came into their hands.<sup>4</sup> Upon the expiration of the term of a corporation's life pursuant to a limitation thereof in its charter its property vests in its directors as trustees for the owners of its stock, subject only to the payment of the claims of creditors.<sup>5</sup> The statutory provision making directors of a corporation its trustees on dissolution for creditors means "that the corporate property should be held and administered upon by the directors, where other persons were not appointed, for the purpose of its distribution in the settlement of all existing claims upon it; whether the claimant was a creditor in the legal sense, or not. The term 'creditor' is broad enough, in view of the evident purpose of this act and of the other provision we have mentioned [Business Corporation Law, § 5], to include those persons to whom the corporation was under any enforceable obligation, as well as those to whom it was indebted."<sup>6</sup> "The statute declaring that the directors and managers of any corporation shall, upon its dissolution, be the trustees of the creditors and stockholders . . . expressly limits the liability to the extent of the property and effects that shall come into their hands."<sup>7</sup> It seems that a way in which directors of a corporation virtually dissolving it by transfer of all its assets may protect themselves from claims of unknown creditors is to apply to the court for leave to distribute and upon giving such notice as the court prescribed to be relieved from personal liability for the distribution.<sup>8</sup> The directors of a corporation who voluntarily dissolve it are liable to one to whom the corporation was contingently liable at the time of the dissolution and who later makes the liability absolute and may be compelled to account for their management and disposition of the corporate assets, although it is improper to appoint a receiver pendente lite if the corporation has no property left and direct the directors to pay over to him all property held by them.<sup>9</sup> In order to hold individually an officer of a dissolved corporation responsible to creditors of the corporation to whom he had stated he would undertake payment of its merchandise debts with the intent of inducing such creditors to refrain from making themselves parties to the dissolution proceeding and from organizing to protect their interests or from bidding for the property and by reason of which statements such creditors let the property go to such officer at unreasonable prices at the sale on dissolution, no statutory provisions are needed, and a judgement in equity that such officer holds the property thus acquired impressed with a trust for the payment of such creditors' just claims against the corporation is proper. "It is not necessary to such a cause of action that the plaintiff should allege the sale by the receiver to have been fraudulent or that they should seek to have it set aside."<sup>10</sup> The real as well as the personal property of a dissolved corporation is a fund for the benefit of creditors in the hands of its directors as trustees.<sup>11</sup> Stockholders of a corporation which has become dissolved by expiration of the time limit of its life set forth in its charter cannot make one not a director of the corporation but whom they allege to have received its property from its directors, since deceased, who had possession thereof at the time of the dissolution, account, as such a step can be taken only through a receiver.<sup>12</sup> Directors voting for voluntary dissolution of their corporation and the employment of an attorney to conduct the necessary proceedings are not personally liable to him for his services unless by special promise they undertake to pay him.<sup>13</sup>

§ 309. Id.: Compelling Election.—Mandamus lies to compel an election of the officers of a private corporation if a proper case is made.<sup>12</sup> Mandamus to compel an election of corporate officers lies in the court's discretion, but not its arbitrary discretion; and while it will not be granted if the omission to hold an election was accidental, it will be when the neglect has continued for a number of years, as such neglect is equivalent to a refusal.<sup>13</sup>

§ 310. Id.: Tenure of Office, Trying Out and Proving Title to Office.—The Attorney-General may maintain an action upon either his own information or the complaint of a private person against a person who usurps, intrudes into or unlawfully holds or exercises within the State an office in a domestic corporation.<sup>14</sup> In such an action the Attorney-General, besides stating the cause of action in the complaint, may in his discretion set forth therein the name of the person rightfully entitled to the office and the facts showing his right thereto, and obtain an order from the court or judge to arrest the defendant upon proof by affidavit that the defendant by means of his usurpation or intrusion has received fees or emoluments belonging to the office.<sup>15</sup> The statute hereinafter quoted, provides that the portion of the Code of Civil Procedure governing arrest applies in general to the order of arrest and the proceedings thereon; that judgment in the action may determine the right of the defendant and relator or the defendant alone; that the action is triable as of right by a jury; that on rendition of judgment for the relator he may execute his office after taking oath and giving bond, and receive the books and papers from the defendant; that relator

may recover his damages from defendant for the latter's usurpation of office; that any number of persons claiming title to the same office may be sued in one action by the Attorney-General; that a temporary injunction against defendant may be had in certain cases and a final one in others; that the plea of incrimination will not avail a witness and that final judgment may oust the defendant and subject him to costs and a fine.<sup>16</sup>

An action may be brought by the Attorney-General in behalf of the People of the State against one or more managers or other officers of a corporation to procure a judgment to suspend them from exercising their office, when it appears that they have abused their trust; or to remove them from office, upon proof or conviction of misconduct, and directing a new election to be held by the body or board duly authorized to hold the same, in order to supply the vacancy created by the removal, or, when there is no such body or board or when all the members thereof are removed, to direct the removal to be reported to the Governor, who may, with the advice and consent of the Senate, fill the vacancies.<sup>17</sup> An injunction order suspending from office or restraining from the performance of his duties a trustee, director or other officer of a corporation can be granted only by the court upon notice of the application therefor to the trustee, director or other officer enjoined; and if such an injunction is made otherwise, it is void.<sup>18</sup> A trustee, director or other officer of a corporation cannot be suspended or removed from office by a court or judge otherwise than by the final judgment of a competent court, in an action brought by the Attorney-General as prescribed by statute.<sup>19</sup>

§ 311. Id.: Holding Over, Removal and Resignation.—The directors may remove at pleasure any president, secretary, treasurer or other officer, agent or employee of a corporation appointed by them.<sup>1</sup> “. . . where officers of a corporation are elected annually or for a definite term, they continue in office until others are elected in their place.”<sup>2</sup> There is nothing in the statute authorizing an action by the Attorney-General to remove corporate trustees, directors, managers or other officers on proof of misconduct “to warrant the doctrine that a man who is at the same time a director and an executive officer of a corporation may, notwithstanding grave misconduct in one capacity, still insist that he is entitled to remain in partial control of the company in his other capacity.”<sup>3</sup> A corporate officer’s resignation duly tendered and delivered is complete; and its validity is not dependent upon its acceptance by the directors or upon the election of his successor.<sup>4</sup> As a general rule the officers and directors of a corporation may resign at any time, and the validity of their resignations does not depend upon their formal acceptance; but, independently of statute, they cannot all simultaneously resign for the purpose of enabling one of their number to go into court and say that the corporation is without officers to preserve its assets, and so to have a receiver appointed; and a statute authorizing the appointment by a court of a receiver for a corporation in an action by a stockholder to preserve its assets when it has no officer empowered to hold them does not apply when such simultaneous resignations are the basis for its invocation.<sup>5</sup> services are performed by the officer acting in another and different capacity than that of an officer, and it appears that the right to compensation is conceded, then he may recover compensation for those services, the same as though he held no office whatever under the corporation.”<sup>6</sup> An officer and director of a corporation may recover for services rendered the corporation outside the regular path of his duties; but the fact that its by-laws give him no salary does not absolve him from showing as a prerequisite to recovery that his services were beyond the range of his official duties as well as their character; nor need he show a specific resolution of employment by the board of directors.<sup>7</sup> One who is a director of a corporation and seeks to recover his salary as its president cannot recover upon quantum meruit or any implied contract, but is bound to show that the directors had assented to his right to compensation or had authorized the payment in some form.<sup>8</sup> It is permissible to conclude, from the facts that one claiming salary as a corporate officer was a stockholder, was interested as a banker in having the banking business of the company to do, and accepted the office and performed its duties without any express understanding that he should be compensated, that he accepted the office and performed its duties gratuitously.<sup>9</sup> A person, neither director nor stockholder of a corporation of which he is appointed secretary without any agreement, expressed or implied, as to compensation, is entitled to a reasonable compensation for his services, if not merely nominal but valuable; and that he rendered them during the hours of his employment by large stockholders in the company and made no claim for compensation therefor for a number of years does not preclude recovery thereof.<sup>10</sup> Salary to one acting as an officer of a corporation is provided as compensation for the services which he is expected to perform as such, and when, with his assent and by his co-operation, the company disposes of all its property and business, so that he has no further duty to perform or service to render as such officer, there is no basis in law or equity for a claim that his salary should continue, as any contract therefor must be deemed dissolved by the act and con-

§ 313. Id.: In Fraud of Creditors or Stockholders.—Majority stockholders electing themselves directors and their officers cannot distribute surplus earnings to themselves as excessive salaries instead of as dividends if by so doing they break their trust duty as directors toward the stockholders; they will be allowed to retain a salary commensurate with the value of their official services, but no more; but the distinction is to be borne in mind that while a director, who is also an officer, drawing a salary as such, through his vote in part as director, is responsible for the excess salary paid, a director who is not an officer is not responsible for excess salary paid an officer, for the reason that in one case the relation to the company is fiduciary and in the other contractual.<sup>1</sup> Officers of a corporation will be restrained by the court from paying to themselves salaries in excess of those to which they are entitled if a minority stockholder shows the increase was made as a threat to compel him to sell some of his stock to one of the majority stockholders.<sup>2</sup> Payments by a corporation to an officer as salary when it is insolvent are void and must be returned by him, leaving him to receive a pro rata with other creditors of claims.<sup>3</sup> An amount paid by a corporation to one of its officers as salary after it had failed to pay rent due may be set aside by its receiver.<sup>4</sup>

The rule that an agreement made by an officer of a corporation with himself by which he derives a benefit is voidable at its option, irrespective of whether or not the agreement is fair to it, is subject to the exception that if creditors are not involved the stockholders may with full knowledge of all the facts ratify the agreement so as to estop the corporation from claiming it to be invalid.<sup>12</sup> Not only an officer of a corporation making a contract in which it is interested whereby he individually obtains a secret profit, but all the directors failing to prevent the wrong and actively participating in it, may be made in equity to account for their misconduct and to restore to the corporation the entire sum which they diverted.<sup>13</sup> "Where in disregard of his duty an officer makes purchases or enters into contracts whereby he acquires a personal advantage, the profits thus obtained belong not to him but to the corporation;" and he is accountable therefor to it.<sup>14</sup> Officers of a corporation cannot buy in its stock at a large discount for their individual account and then supply the subscribers for shares, who had paid for them at par, with a part of their shares, and make the corporation their debtor for the shares so supplied at their par value.<sup>15</sup> An officer of a corporation may lend it money at six per cent. but not at any greater rate of interest.<sup>16</sup> One who while vice-president of a corporation asked its bookkeeper, who also performed the duties of secretary and assistant treasurer, for a copy of his account on its books, cannot hold it thereon as on an account stated.<sup>17</sup> When the facts tend to show acquiescence by a corporation in the assertion by its wrongdoing officer of a right to act for it in doing a thing for his personal benefit, the wholesome rule and management of the corporate business, and the contract is one within the power of the corporation to make, and the making of which could, therefore, be delegated to an officer or agent, the officer so assuming to act is clothed with apparent authority upon which such third person may rely in the absence of notice of limitations upon the officer's authority which are imposed by the by-laws or the proceedings of the board of directors; but if the officer, with a liability for whose act the corporation is sought to be charged, is one to whose office there is attached no inherent executive authority, then, and in that event, the third person dealing with the officer in an executive capacity is chargeable with notice of an apparent want of authority and so deals with the latter at his peril; and in such case, if the officer's authority to make the contract is disputed, it is incumbent upon such third person to establish the authority by proper evidence. If the by-laws, which are relied upon as evidence, impose certain limitations or restrictions upon the exercise of the authority, such limitations or restrictions may not be disregarded, but must be held to determine the extent of the authority."<sup>15</sup> " . . . when the directors permit its officers to hold themselves out as clothed with full power to manage all its affairs for a long time, and thus lead innocent persons to contract with them in the belief that they had such powers, they cannot be heard to repudiate such contracts by invoking a by-law which they themselves allowed to fall into desuetude."<sup>16</sup> A contract made by an officer of a corporation within the apparent scope of his powers raises such a presumption of his authority to act for it as to put on it the task of proving the contrary.<sup>17</sup> To show the authority of one who signs a contract for a corporation as its officer it is competent to prove he was in its offices, attending to its business and conversing with persons desiring to do business with it.<sup>18</sup> Persons signing a contract as a " building committee " and sealing it with their individual seals may nevertheless put liability therefor upon the corporation for the benefit of which it was made.<sup>19</sup> A guaranty by a corpora-sufficient to warrant a finding that a contract by the president of a corporation retaining an attorney at a retainer payable in its stock was approved or acquiesced in by its board of directors to show that the president had authority to contract, that the corporation customarily had retained attorneys through its president with the board's approval, that they had been paid in stock, and that the attorney in question had rendered the services required by the contract with the knowledge of the directors.<sup>10</sup> A president of a corporation has general authority to employ counsel for it; and even if such employment be ultra vires the counsel may recover for his services if the contract is executed and the corporation has received the benefits therefrom.<sup>11</sup> A corporation's president has power to cause an attorney to appear for it on an application for appointment of receivers to wind it up and distribute its assets in this State, notwithstanding by arrangement he was by convention limited in his usual functions.<sup>12</sup>

of its treasury stock.<sup>15</sup> Evidence may be given by parol that one signing a contract in his personal name, adding the words "Secretary and Treasurer," was such officers of a corporation and that he was authorized to enter into such a contract at a meeting of its officers; and the fact that its minutes show no such meeting or authorization, and that its by-laws provided that the corporation's contracts must be executed in a certain way to bind it, will not prevent its being held on the contract.<sup>16</sup>

Such an affix will be regarded as descriptive of the persons and not of the character of the liability. Unless the promise purports to be by the corporation, it is that of the persons who subscribe to it; and the fact of adding to their names an abbreviation of some official title has no legal signification as qualifying their obligation, and imposes no obligation upon the corporation whose officers they may be. . . . Unless the language creates, or fairly implies, the undertaking of the corporation, if the purpose is equivocal, the obligation is that of its apparent makers."<sup>17</sup> A note signed by an individual with that word following his name which indicates his official position in a corporation is on its face his individual obligation and not of the corporation, and by suing the corporation the holder is not prevented from suing the individual.<sup>18</sup> In law a note signed by individual names, though with the word "President" after one and "Treasurer" after another and with the name of a corporation in the margin, is the individual note of each signer.<sup>19</sup> A note signed by the names of two individuals, after one of which is written the word "President" and after the other the word "Secretary," followed by the words "of the _____" (a corporation), and which makes no reference in its body to the corporation as a promisor, is upon its face the individual note of the two makers; but, if an action thereon is brought between the original parties thereto, it is competent for the makers "to show that there was a corporation by that name; that the makers were its president and secretary; that the corporation had the benefit of the consideration; that the makers were authorized to make the note as the act of the corporation, and intended to do so, and that the payee "at the time he received the note knew these facts, and took the note with the understanding that the corporation was its maker."<sup>20</sup> A corporate officer cannot generally bind the corporation on a promissory note without special authority by specific directors' resolution or corporate by-laws; and if there be no corporate seal on the note simple production of the note does not make out a prima facie case against the corporation, but power of the officer to execute the note must be shown.<sup>1</sup> It is doubtful if the mere fact that a note is signed by the president and treasurer of a corporation is sufficient to establish its validity, as "there should be proof of the specific authority to affix the corporate name to the note as its obligation, or that the corporation received the avails of the note or that there was a course of business which justified the bank in accepting it as the obligation of the corporation;" and "even if proof of the execution of the note by the president and treasurer were sufficient to bind the corporation on a note for its benefit, such rule does not obtain if the note was in fact accommodation paper, and the bank knew of this defect."<sup>2</sup> In spite of a promissory note of a corporation not having been executed as prescribed by its by-laws, it is still a question of fact if its execution was authorized, when the officer signing it had signed other notes for its benefit, his act has not been repudiated by its directors and it received the benefits of the note.<sup>3</sup> "Undoubtedly the general rule is that one who receives from an officer of a corporation the notes or securities of such corporation, in payment of, or as security for, a personal debt of such officer, does so at his own peril. Prima facie the act is unlawful, and, unless actually authorized, the purchaser will be deemed to have taken them with notice of

§ 326. Id.: Of President.—When the nature of a corporation's business is such as to justify the giving of negotiable paper and the making of such instruments is an incident to the business it carries on, the authority of its president, general manager and financial agent to sign such paper need not be shown in order to bind the corporation to paper signed by him alone for it, even though its by-laws require its secretary, too, to sign, if such by-laws be not known to the one dealing with the paper.<sup>10</sup> When a promissory note of a trading corporation is executed and delivered by its president in its name and is such a note as it might authorize or ratify, it is not necessary to show prima facie that the contract was in fact authorized by specific authority of the corporation but want of authority must be plead and proven as a defense.<sup>11</sup> “It being the usual custom of the company to transfer its notes by the mere indorsement of the president, such indorsement is all that is requisite to effect a transfer of the title, where the transfer itself is authorized by a resolution of the directors.”<sup>12</sup> The fact of the uniform practice of a corporation to have its notes to raise money for its business endorsed by its president for the purpose of passing title justifies an inference of competent authority for such a purpose in any certain case.<sup>13</sup> A corporation, despite a by-law requiring its treasurer and president or secretary to sign its notes, is bound by the notes signed by its president alone like others signed in the same way and the proceeds of which it used, even if the only authorization by its directors for the notes in question was by implication through their knowledge that he was the only person trying to raise money for the company and actually raising it in some way, and the entry

§ 327. Id.: Of Treasurer.—The treasurer of a business corporation has no implied authority to make promissory notes in its name and one holding them and attempting to hold it must show either that the treasurer had authority or that a course of dealing implied his authority or that the corporation was estopped — through acceptance of the benefits of the note or otherwise — from denying such authority.<sup>2</sup> A plaintiff suing on note of a corporation made by its treasurer empowered by its by-laws simply to incur indebtedness in the regular course of business, to establish the corporation's liability on the note, must show either acquiescence or ratification by the directors of the power assumed by the treasurer or such a course of dealing by that officer and such negligence on the part of the directors as could estop the corporation from denying the treasurer's authority.<sup>3</sup> A corporation is bound by a note executed in its name by its treasurer on which a loan is made for its benefit if it consciously invested him with such powers as a sole manager of its affairs would have, and a by-law requiring another officer's countersignature to the corporation's notes will not affect its liability.<sup>4</sup> When one to whom a note is payable with the abbreviation "Treas." after his name, is in fact treasurer of a corporation to the knowledge of an endorsee, to whom he endorses it by signing his name and adding the word "Treasurer," and such endorsee receives it on account of a demand against the corporation, the treasurer is not individually liable.<sup>5</sup> A cheque in payment of salary alleged to be due the president of a corporation, signed by the treasurer or assistant treasurer and appearing on its face to be the corporation's cheque is evidence of the obligation of the corporation.<sup>6</sup>

§ 334. Id.: Actions and Service of Process On.—The service of process in actions against corporations is generally discussed in the four hundred and forty-third section of this book. The verification of pleadings in corporate actions is generally discussed in the four hundred and forty-first section of this book. Process served on one as an officer of a corporation will not be set aside on proof that he was not elected to any office at an election held prior to the service, if he was such officer prior to such election, unless it be proven that new officers were elected.<sup>10</sup> Service of process on a person who has been president and a director in a corporation but who had resigned before the service (though no action had been taken on his resignation) is not sufficient to justify the entry of judgment against the corporation.<sup>11</sup> Service of process on one who had resigned as president of a corporation and whose successor had been elected is not binding on the corporation.<sup>12</sup> Service of process on the president de facto of a corporation concludes it.<sup>13</sup> Non-resident officers of a local corporation coming to the State to take part in bankruptcy proceedings of such corporation are exempt from service of process by the State courts, although merely notified in an order of reference to appear.<sup>14</sup> Service of process in actions against corporations is generally discussed in a succeeding section.<sup>15</sup>

<sup>15</sup> St. Corp. L. § 34 (L. 1909, c. 61). The present statute is section 34 of the Stock Corporation Law; which is the same section of chapter 61, Laws of 1909 (Consolidated Laws); which is the same as the same section of chapter 415, Laws of 1905; which is the same as section 30 of chapter 354, Laws of 1901, except that the law of 1901 did not contain the subdivision found in the later laws which is numbered “4”; which is the same as section 30 of chapter 384, Laws of 1897, except that the last paragraph read in the 1897 law: “Such report shall be signed by a majority of its directors, and verified by the oath of the president or vice-president and treasurer or secretary, and filed in the office of the secretary of state, and in the office of the county clerk of the county within this state where its principal business office may be located. If such report is not so made and filed, all the directors of the corporation shall jointly and severally be personally liable for all the debts of the corporation then existing, and for all contracted before such report shall be made. No director shall be liable for the failure to make and file such report if he shall file with the secretary of state, within thirty days after the first day of February, or the first day of May, as the case may be, a verified certificate, stating that he has endeavored to have such report made and filed, but that the officers or a majority of the directors have refused and neglected to make and file the same, and shall append to such certificate a report containing the items required to be stated in such annual report, so far as they are within his knowledge or are obtainable from sources of information open to him, and verified by him to be true to the best of his knowledge, information and belief.” The 1897 law is the same as chapter 688, Laws of 1892, section 30, except that the latter only says the report shall be filed “in the office of the county clerk of the county” and does not then add the three words "within this state" which the 1897 law does add. The laws of 1875, chapter 611, section 18, differed materially from the succeeding laws above mentioned and read in whole: "Every such corporation shall annually, within twenty days after the first day of January, make a report, which shall state the amount of capital, and the proportion actually paid in, the amount and, in general terms, the nature of its existing assets and debts, and the names of its then stockholders, and the dividends if any declared since the last report, which report shall be signed by the president and a majority of the directors, and shall be verified by oath of the president or secretary of such corporation, and filed in the office of the Secretary of State, and if any such corporation shall fail so to do, all the directors thereof shall be jointly and severally liable for all the debts of the corporation then existing, and for all that shall be contracted before such report shall be made. Provided that if any director shall file with the Secretary of State, at any time within thirty days after such first of January, a certificate, verified by the oath of such director, stating that he has endeavored to have such report made and signed as aforesaid, but that the officers or a majority of the directors have refused or neglected to make and file such report; and shall append to such certificate a report containing the items aforesaid, so far as they are within his knowledge or are obtainable from sources of information open to him, which report shall be verified by him as being true to the best of his knowledge, information and belief, in that case such director shall not be liable on account of such failure to make and file such report upon making proof of such facts in any action which may be commenced against him, upon the trial thereof. Whenever, under this section, a judgment shall be recovered against a director, severally, all the directors of the corporation shall contribute a ratable share of the amount paid by such director on such judgment, and such director shall have a right of action against his co-directors, jointly or severally, to recover from them the proportion of the amount so paid on such judgment." The Law of 1875 (the same year), but chapter 510, section 12, read in whole: "Every such company shall within twenty days from the first day of January, if a year from the time of the filing of the certificate of incorporation shall then have expired, and, if so long a time shall not have expired, then within twenty days from the first day of January in each year after the expiration of a year from the time of filing such certificate, make a report which shall be published in some newspaper published in the town, city or village, or if there be no newspaper published in said town, city or village, then in some newspaper published nearest the place where the business of the company is carried on, which shall state the amount of capital, and of the proportion actually paid in, and the amount of its existing debts, which report shall be signed by the president and a majority of the trustees, and shall be verified by the oath of the president or secretary of said company, and filed in the office of the clerk of the county where the business of the company shall be carried on, and if any of the companies shall fail so to do, all the trustees of the company shall be jointly and severally liable for all the debts of the company then existing, and for all that shall be contracted before such report shall be made; but whenever under this section a judgment shall be recovered against a trustee severally, all the trustees of the company shall contribute a ratable share of the amount paid by such trustee on such judgment, and such trustee shall have a right of action against his co-trustees, jointly or severally, to recover from them their proportion of the amount so paid on such judgment; provided that nothing in this act contained shall affect any action now pending." The Laws of 1848, chapter 40, section 12, read in whole: "Every such company shall annually, within twenty days from the first day of January, make a report which shall be published in some newspaper, published in the town, city or village, or if there be no newspaper published in said town, city or village, then in some newspaper published nearest the place where the business of said company is carried on, which shall state the amount of capital, and of the proportion actually paid in, and the amount of its existing debts, which report shall be signed by the president and a majority of the trustees; and shall be verified by the oath of the president or secretary of said company, and filed in the office of the clerk of the county where the business of the company shall be carried on; and if any of said companies shall fail so to do, all the trustees of the company shall be jointly and severally liable for all the debts of the company, then existing, and for all that shall be contracted before such report shall be made."

A law requiring directors of a corporation to file an annual report is not binding after the corporation has abandoned its business and franchise and is entirely without property or means of continuing or resuming its business and has no intention of so doing. Watertown National Bank v. Bagley, 134 A. D. 831, 119 N. Y. Supp. 592 (1909);

The last-named act is identical with the present statute except that the subdivision numbered "4" in the existing law is not found in the 1901 law. "To absolve directors from the liability imposed upon them by statute for failure to file an annual report of their corporation "it must appear that the corporation is insolvent, that it has ceased to exist by dissolution or as a matter of fact from a total abandonment of its business and its being put in such a position that it does not intend to and cannot continue or resume operations under its franchise." *Horrocks Desk Co. v. Held, insufficient to dispense with filing of report.

Decisions under L. 1897, c. 384, § 30.

The statute making directors of a corporation liable for its debts if it does not file an annual report is penal in its nature and must be construed strictly in their favor; and a corporate creditor cannot sue them thereunder "unless three things co-exist: The default in making the report; the fact that at the time of such default the defendants were trustees or directors, and a debt due from the company." Hoboken Beef Co. v. Hand, 104 A. D. 390, 93 N. Y. Supp. 834 (1905); St. Corp. L. § 30 (L. 1897, c. 384), requiring a corporation "doing business without the United States" to file its report "before the first day of May." The beef company did business within the U. S. A. and in England, Canada and Germany. The defendants resigned as directors April 21, 1900. The indebtedness arose from a sale in August, 1899, and the suit was for defendants' corporation's failure to make a report on or after January 1, 1900. Held, not liable. The conditions upon which the liability of directors for failure of their corporation to file an annual report depend under the statute are in the nature of provisos and need not be alleged and proved in a complaint to establish that liability, but must be averred and proved in the answer. Boynton v. Sprague, 100 A. D. 443, 91 N. Y. Supp. 839 (1905); aff'd 183 N. Y. 505, 76 N. E. 1089; St. Corp. L. § 30 (L. 1897, c. 384). "While a technical dissolution of the company is not necessary to relieve directors from the consequences of not filing an annual report, the abandonment of the business and its franchises must be certain and final, and such as to put the company beyond the possibility of resuming business." Stevenson v. Cowan, 84 A. D. 135, 82 N. Y. Supp. 78 (1903); St. Corp. L. § 30 (L. 1897, c. 384). It had no receipts and did no business because a municipality undertook a same business, but it sued the municipality. A liability of a corporation on bonds becomes due and the cause of action against its directors (because no corporate annual report has been filed) for such liability matures when the principal of the bonds becomes due, and a director elected within three years therefrom is liable to the penalty for failure to file such report as the debt on the bonds was "then existing", within the statute's meaning, when he was elected. Morgan v. Hedstrom, 164 N. Y. 224, 58 N. E. 26 (1900); St. Corp. L. § 30. The statute making the directors of a corporation not filing an annual report jointly and severally personally liable for the corporate debts then existing declares the legislative policy in regard to the various laws embraced in the revision made by it; is but a continuation of prior laws; include within its meaning mortgage debts, and is remedial and should be liberally construed if necessary. Morgan v. Hedstrom, 164 N. Y. 224, 58 N. E. 26 (1900); St. Corp. L. § 30. One purchasing of a director who was in default in filing the annual report required of a corporation is not liable to the penalty of personal liability for the corporation's debts put by statute on such a defaulting director and is not precluded (as would be his transferrer) from holding his transferrer's co-directors to such personal liability. Morgan v. Hedstrom, 164 N. Y. 224, 58 N. E. 26 (1900); St. Corp. L. § 30. "The statute makes every director jointly and severally liable for the penalty incurred by the default of the board of which he is a member, in filing the report. The liability is for debts 'then existing'—that is, whether due or not, . . . successive defaults by the same directors do not renew as to them the penalty already incurred, but when a new member comes into the board a new default makes him jointly and severally liable for the debts 'then existing'—that is, he becomes jointly liable with the old members of the new defaulting board as they were already liable because of their previous default, the new member is jointly associated with them in that liability, so long as their several liability is concurrent." Morgan v. Hedstrom, 164 N. Y. 224, 58 N. E. 26 (1900); St. Corp. L. § 30. ". . . the directors who have failed to file a report are liable for a judgment entered for costs against the corporation, precisely to the same extent as they would be for any debt if the judgment is entered while their default continues." Matty v. Simpson, 64 A. D. 1, 71 N. Y. Supp. 731 (1901). The statute making directors omitting to file corporate annual reports personally liable for all the corporation's debts "then existing, and for all contracted before such report shall be made" means "that the liability for default in publishing the required annual report is limited to debts contracted while the director continues in office, and does not include a debt incurred after he ceases to be a director, although the default continues." Sinclair v. Fuller, 158

N. Y. 607, 53 N. E. 510 (1899); St. Corp. L. § 30.

Decisions under L. 1892, c. 688, § 30.

In seeking to hold a director liable for a deposit made with his corporation on the grounds that its annual reports had not been filed and that it failed, the action must be brought within the period limited by statute for the recovery of a penalty computing the time when the cause of action arose from the moment it received the deposit, if in doing so it exceeded its corporate powers and engaged in a business not authorized for it, irrespective of any demand for the deposit. Chapman v. Lynch, 156 N. Y. 551, 51 N. E. 275 (1898); C. C. P. § 383, subd. 3. Corporate directors may validly waive the statute of limitations applicable to an action against them under the statute to enforce their personal liability for debts of a corporation for which they failed to file an annual report. Costello v. Outterson, 112 A. D. 680, 98 N. Y. Supp. 880 (1906); St. Corp. L. § 30 (L. 1892, c. 688); repealed — see L. 1897, c. 384; L. 1901, c. 354; L. 1905, c. 415. Persons who have, after election, accepted the office of corporate directors, managed the corporate affairs and assumed the duties and emoluments of their office may not raise the point that they are not directors because they held no stock, in order to escape a statutory liability imposed on directors. Donnelly v. Pancoast, 15 A. D. 323, 44 N. Y. Supp. 104 (1897). [Failure to file annual report.] A corporation has not ceased to do or abandoned its business, so as to absolve, from his statutory liability for failure to file a report, a director, "so long as the trustees [directors] and the stockholders still had the right and the power to rescind former action and continue the business." Brown v. Clark, 81 Hun, 267, 30 N. Y. Supp. 801 (1894). A majority of acting directors, who have tried unavailingly to fill up the membership of their board and officers, comply with a statute requiring a majority of the corporation's directors to sign a report verified by the oath of the president or vice-president and treasurer or secretary, if they sign the report and have it verified by the only officer of the corporation authorized to do so. Manhattan Co. v. Kaldenberg, 165 N. Y. 1, 58 N. E. 790 (1900); L. 1892, c. 2, § 30. "The recovery of a judgment and the return of an execution are not conditions precedent to the right of a creditor to recover from the directors of the corporation for failing to file reports." Rose v. Chadwick, 9 A. D. 311, 41 N. Y. Supp. 190 (1896); St. Corp. L. § 30 (L. 1892, c. 688). "The right to maintain the action [to hold a director individually liable for the debt of his corporation by reason of failure to file an annual report] depends upon the existence of three facts: the failure to make and file a report, a debt against the corporation and the directorship of the defendant at the time of the default." Union National Bank v. Scott, 53 A. D. 65, 66 N. Y. Supp. 145 (1900); St. Corp. L. § 30 (L. 1892, c. 688). ". . . in order to charge a director with a debt of the corporation, three elements must exist, directorship, failure to make and file the report, and a debt against the corporation existing at some period of the directorship and at the time of the failure . . . the debt must be one existing in fact, and . . . a director cannot be held liable for unliquidated damages arising out of a breach of contract made with the corporation . . ." Hill v. Weidinger, 110 A. D. 683, 97 N. Y. Supp. 473 (1906); St. Corp. L. § 30 (L. 1892, c. 688). The statute penalizing directors if the annual report of their corporation be not filed in the office of the clerk of the county where its principal business office is located refers to the business office of the corporation in fact and not to one existing because of a presumption arising in consequence of the insertion of a locality in its certificate of incorporation. Uptegrove v. Schwarzwaelder, 46 A. D. 20, 61 N. Y. Supp. 623 (1899); aff'd 167 N. Y. 587, 60 N. E. 1121; St. Corp. L. § 30 (L. 1892, c. 688). The stockholders voted to change its principal business office to another county where, as a fact, its principal business office was thereafter located. The filing of the report in such county was held sufficient. An officer of a corporation making a false statement in an annual report becomes liable for the damages which naturally flow from or are caused by the falsehood, and the measure thereof is that applicable in cases of fraud and breach of warranty. Parsons v. Johnson, 28 A. D. 1, 50 N. Y. Supp. 780 (1898); St. Corp. L. § 30 (L. 1892, c. 688). The value at which land was taken for stock was held properly considered in determining the value of the stock. One suing a director for a corporate debt and alleging a cause of action arising out of a breach of his assignor's contract with the corporation for which the director was not liable cannot prove and recover on a wholly different cause of action, against objection and without amendment of his pleadings; and the pleadings cannot be conformed to the proof even though the defendant was probably not misled. Hill v. Weidinger, 110 A. D. 683, 97 N. Y. Supp. 473 (1906); St. Corp. L. § 30 (L. 1892, c. 688).

Decisions under L. 1875, c. 611, § 18.

"It is essential to the liability of directors, by virtue of the statute, for default in filing a report, that their occupancy of that relation, such default and the debt of the corporation have existence at the same point of time. . . . It is only necessary for the protection of directors against liability upon a particular debt against their corporation that the requisite report be filed prior to the existence of such debt." Gold v. Clyne, 134 N. Y. 262, 17 L.R.A. 767, 31 N. E. 980 (1892); L. 1875, c. 611, § 18. The corporation's existence ended under its charter before completion of the contract under which the indebtedness arose. "The indebtedness of the corporation was dependent upon performance of the contract by the plaintiff, and did not until then arise."

Decisions under L. 1875, c. 510, § 12.

A judgment for costs in an action by a corporation rendered against it is a debt which can be enforced against one of its trustees by reason of the company's failure to make, publish and file its capital stock report. Allen v. Clark, 108 N. Y. 269, 15 N. E. 387 (1888); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12, as amend'd L. 1875, c. 510. "The word 'indebtedness' in this section clearly includes, not only every debt voluntarily contracted by the company, but every debt of every nature however contracted or arising." While the statutory liability imposed on trustees or directors for their corporation's debts when the corporation fails to file its annual report is highly penal and not to be extended by construction, so that one seeking to hold them under it must allege and prove affirmatively every fact and circumstance upon which his right to recover depends, yet all the terms of the statute must be substantially complied with to relieve the directors from liability, e. g., the report if made within the statutory period may be filed or published as soon as practicable thereafter, but it must be filed or published, and a delivery to the corporation's secretary and his neglect to file it does not relieve the directors. Whitney v. Cammann, 137 N. Y. 342, 33 N. E. 305 (1893); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12, as amend'd L. 1875, c. 510. To show, in an action to hold a director personally liable for his corporation's promissory note, that the debt was contracted while he acted as such and was payable within one year from the time it was contracted, it is not sufficient that he was a director when the note was given. Straus v. Sage, 5 Misc. 255, 25 N. Y. Supp. 93 (1893); L. 1875, c. 267, § 8.

Decisions under L. 1848, c. 40, § 12.

A complaint in an action against corporate directors to recover a debt due from it to the plaintiff because of failure to make its annual report, when the corporate charter from the Legislature provides that directors "shall incur no personal liabilities beyond the amount of the capital stock held and owned by them respectively" must allege that such directors are stockholders. Wright v. Booth, 69 N. Y. 620 (1877); L. 1848, c. 40; L. 1873, c. 493. When corporate trustees are sought to be held liable for their corporation's debts by reason of the falsity of one or more of its statutory annual reports, the reports should receive a liberal interpretation and the benefit of any doubt as to their true sense and meaning should be given the trustees in the absence of bad faith. Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 63 N. Y. 62 (1875); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12, as amend'd L. 1853, c. 333. "The [annual] report [of a corporation] is to be the act of the trustees, and the duty of making it is devolved upon them. The secretary is but the servant of the company, performing such acts and rendering such services as are incident to the office or may be specially imposed. He might, under the direction of the trustees, prepare the paper and verify it by his oath in place of the president, but he could not subscribe to it the names of the trustees, or verify it in any way to make it the act of the corporation and a compliance with the statute, so as to relieve the trustees from their duty, or the liability resulting from an omission to perform it." Bolen v. Crosby, 49

N. Y. 183 (1872); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. Although an action to recover the amount of a claim against a manufacturing company on the ground of the failure of the defendant as one of its trustees to make and file its annual report as required by statute would have absolutely abated if either party had died at any time before verdict, because it is a penal action and therefore properly characterized as ex delicto, yet if it go to judgment before the death of either party, the reversal of the judgment, followed by the death of either or both parties, does not prevent appeal from the judgment by the representatives of the losing side, because while there could be no new trial after the reversal and death the judgment still had a potential existence till determined by appeal. Carr v. Rischer, 119 N. Y. 117, 23 N. E. 296 (1890); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. "An assignee of a claim against a manufacturing corporation may maintain an action against a trustee thereof, to enforce a liability for its debts . . . because of failure to file an annual report, or because of signing a false report." Pier v. George, 86 N. Y. 613 (1881); Gen. Mfg. Act. Headnote. No opinion reported. As an action against an individual who is trustee of a manufacturing corporation to hold him for a debt due by it because of failure by him to make its annual report is not to recover a debt he owes but to impose on him, as penalty for his default, its debt, the action is one for a penalty and his answer need not be verified. Gadsden v. Woodward, 103 N. Y. 242, 8 N. E. 653 (1886); C. C. P. §§ 523, 837; Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. ". . . when a debt against a corporation, owned by a trustee, is assigned to him absolutely for value, the assignee, on a default by the company subsequently occurring to make a report, may proceed under the . . . [statute to hold the trustees personally liable for the debt] although the assignor continued to be a trustee up to the time of the default." Cornell v. Roach, 101 N. Y. 373, 5 N. E. 52 (1886); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. When a corporate lessee agrees that taxes are payable by it and if not paid by a certain date shall be payable as additional rent, they become a debt of the company (for which its directors or trustees are liable on failure to file its annual report) at the moment the tax authorities impose the taxes, though the cause of action against the company does not accrue until the date set in the lease; and if such date is subsequent to the statutory limitation of time within which the company's annual report should have been, but was not filed, the short statute of limitations against the directors begins to run from such date. Rector, etc., of Trinity Church v. Vanderbilt, 98 N. Y. 171 (1885); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. The action given by statute against a corporate trustee to recover the penalty imposed upon the corporation for failure to make and file its annual report is final and ex delicto in character and does not survive against the personal representatives of the trustee on his decease. Stokes v. Stickney, 96 N. Y. 323 (1884); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. One named in a certificate of incorporation as a trustee for one year is not liable (without proof that he held over) to one who became a creditor of the corporation after the expiration of such year for the debt then contracted by the corporation to such creditor on the ground that the corporation failed to publish and file the annual statutory report. Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. v. Hotchkiss, 82 N. Y. 471 (1880); L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. Trustees of a corporation elected for a year during which it discontinues business because of insolvency and they resign cannot be held responsible for filing a corporate annual report or for any statutory consequences resulting from such failure. Van Amburgh v. Baker, 81 N. Y. 46 (1880); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. Even had they not resigned, but merely neglected to hold over, they would not have been liable. An action against trustees of a corporation for its debt because of alleged failure to file an annual report need not be commenced within three years after the debt of the company arose, but may be brought at any time within six years from its appearing that the company fails to file its report (provided that the time of bringing the action be within three years of such failure to file). Duckworth v. Roach, 81 N. Y. 49 (1880); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. Debt arose April, 1873. Failure to file report was in January, 1875. Held, the action could be brought any time to April, 1879. The liability imposed on trustees of a corporation by statute for failure to file an annual report "does not attach, if a report is made in terms complying with the statute, although some of the representations be untrue." Bonnell v. Griswold, 80 N. Y. 128 (1880); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. An action against a trustee of a corporation to hold him for its debt must be commenced within three years after the date set by statute for the filing of the corporation's report. Knox v. Baldwin, 80 N. Y. 610 (1880); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12; Code of Procedure, § 92, subd. 2. The fact that a corporation is bankrupt and has ceased to do business relieves its trustees from the obligation of making and filing the report required by statute. Bruce v. Platt, 80 N. Y. 379 (1880); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. The reason for the resignation of a corporate trustee is unnecessary to be told, nor his motives or intentions to be examined, in an action to hold him for liability for corporate debts by reason of failure to file its annual report. Bruce v. Platt, 80

N. Y. 379 (1880); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. ". . . the liability of a trustee [of a corporation for its debts for failure to file its annual report] does not depend upon the fact that he was such when the debt was contracted, but upon his being a trustee when the default as to filing the report occurred." Bruce v. Platt, 80 N. Y. 379 (1880); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. An action to hold a trustee liable for a debt of his corporation evidenced by a judgment recovered against it the year before failure to file its annual report (on which his liability is founded) occurred must be brought within three years from such failure; i. e., from the time the cause of action against him accrued. Losee v. Bullard, 79 N. Y. 404 (1880); L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. One who is proceeded against for a debt of a corporation because of its failure to file its annual report should be permitted to show that the corporate enterprise was abandoned before final incorporation. DeWitt v. Hastings, 69 N. Y. 578 (1877); L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. In a suit against corporate directors based on an allegation of omission to make, file and publish any annual report the question of the falsity of a report made is not in issue. Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 68 N. Y. 34 (1876); L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. The allegation by one seeking to hold trustees of a corporation liable for its debts by reason of its failure to file its annual report that the company had not made, filed and published its report as required by law, puts upon the one making it the duty of affirmatively proving it, even though this can only be done by proof of a negative. Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 68 N. Y. 34 (1876); L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. "For an omission to file any report all the trustees are liable, jointly and severally, to the creditors; for making and filing a false report, only such of the trustees as do the act are liable;" so that to justify a union in one complaint of causes of action both for such omission and for making a false report, each of the causes of action must affect all the parties to the action. Bonnell v. Griswold, 68 N. Y. 294 (1877); L. 1848, c. 40, §§ 12 and 15; Code, § 167. One who is creditor of a corporation and as such seeks to hold one of its trustees for the debt on the ground of its failure to file its annual report cannot succeed if he be a co-trustee with the defendant; and he will be held to be such if he voluntarily assumed the character of trustee. Easterly v. Barber, 65 N. Y. 252 (1875); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. The statutory liability of corporate trustees for all debts existing or previously contracted by the corporation at the time of its default in making its annual report "is coextensive and concurrent with that of the corporation. It is subject to the same conditions and qualifications that attach to the original indebtedness and whatever would defeat or abate an action against the corporation will serve as a shield and defense to the trustees. . . . the trustees are not liable to an action, except for debts actually due, and for which a present right of action exists against the corporation." Jones v. Barlow, 62 N. Y. 202 (1875); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. The statute making corporate trustees liable individually for the debts of their corporation if it had failed to make its annual report "was, no doubt, intended to include all ordinary debts which might be contracted in the prosecution of the legitimate business of the company, but does not . . . embrace such as might be imposed upon the company by fraud or improper practices of the creditor." Adams v. Mills, 60 N. Y. 533 (1875); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. The alleged debt was of money credited plaintiff on the corporate books claimed to have been borrowed by plaintiff's husband for the corporation's benefit, and was unknown to anyone save plaintiff's husband who was a trustee and secretary of the company, and another, who was a trustee and its treasurer. A trustee whose term has expired but who nevertheless continues to act, even though after the affairs of the company are wound up by sale of its property, is liable to suit for a corporate debt if the company fails to file its annual report. Sanborn v. Lefferts, 58 N. Y. 179 (1874); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. In an action against trustees of a corporation to recover a debt due by it because of its failure to make and file its annual report, a judgment for the debt recovered by the creditor in an action against the corporation is not conclusive against the trustees, nor evidence against them, as they are not privies or parties to it, but should be personally served with process and given an opportunity of trying the question of debt. Miller v. White, 50 N. Y. 137 (1872); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. In determining the right by one to recover from trustees a debt due by their corporation because of failure to file its annual report, "the right to the debt, as evidenced by the judgment against an insolvent corporation, and the right to recover the same debt from the defendants upon their personal liability, cannot exist in the hands of different persons. The assignment of the judgment necessarily carries the debt; they are inseparable." Bolen v. Crosby, 49 N. Y. 183 (1892); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. An action against trustees of a corporation to charge them with its debt under the statute making them liable when it fails to file its annual report is limited by the three year statute, because the liability is in the nature of a penalty. Merchants' Bank v. Bliss, 35 N. Y. 412 (1866); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. —, § 12; Code, § 92, subd. 2. In order to hold a corporate trustee liable for his corporation's debt by reason of failure to make and file its annual report "three circumstances must concur in point of time . . . : the existence of the debt; the existence of the default in making the report; and the trusteeship. Where these concur, the trustee is liable for all debts, if he was such trustee when the default occurred. If he was not a trustee at the time of the default, but became such afterwards, then his liability is limited to debts created while he remains trustee, and while the default continues." Shaler & Hall Quarry Co. v. Bliss, 27 N. Y. 297 (1863); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. The object of the statutory provision requiring an annual report to be made and filed by corporations "so far as relates to creditors, or persons dealing with the corporation, appears to have been to give such notoriety to the pecuniary condition of the company, through the publication of its annual statement, as to deprive it of credit, if it should be unworthy of it, and to give to persons to whom it might become indebted while the statement should be withheld, the personal responsibility of the trustees for such indebtedness." Shaler & Hall Quarry Co. v. Bliss, 27 N. Y. 297 (1863); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. Under a statute making trustees of a corporation liable for its debts existing and pre-existing its default in making its annual report, those guilty of such default in a certain year are liable only for antecedent debts and their successors, if they continue the default for a year till the next date for making an annual report, and no longer, are liable for the debts afterwards contracted during that year, and no longer. Boughton v. Otis, 21 N. Y. 261 (1860); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. "If the persons succeeding to office promptly obey the requirement of the act they will escape all liability. . . . If they do not, they very properly incur the hazard of the debts which they themselves as trustees contract." In

§ 346. Id.: Liabilities Common to Directors and Officers, In General.—The mere fact that a director or officer has transactions with his corporation, appearing on the books, which show a credit balance at the time an action against him is brought for official misconduct, but the correctness of which are not successfully assailed, cannot be made the basis of a decision and an interlocutory judgment directing an accounting by him.<sup>16</sup> Intangible as well as tangible assets of a corporation constitute a trust fund, and whoever wrongfully appropriates such assets, whether he be a director or officer or not, may be charged therefor as constructive trustee.<sup>17</sup> One who is an officer and director of a corporation is bound to account to it for all moneys that come into his hands by virtue of his official acts and cannot be permitted to shield himself from determining the liability of one for a debt of a corporation as being a trustee thereof (it having failed to file its annual report), "a debt for lumber furnished under . . . contract, subsequent to its execution, can [not] be said to have been contracted when the agreement was signed." Garrison v. Howe, 17 N. Y. 458 (1858); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. The debt of a corporation for which a director is liable by statute for failure to file its report includes an unliquidated claim arising out of breach of a contract of employment, but not costs of the action against the corporation to recover therefor. Green v. Easton, 74 Hun, 329, 26 N. Y. Supp. 553 (1893); L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. A statute requiring directors of a corporation to see to it that its annual report is filed should be construed as though the words "during their continuance in office" were at its end, as the liability attaches to the individuals, who may change, and not to the office, which does not change. The Shaler & Hall Quarry Co. v. Bliss, 34 Barb. 309 (1861); aff'd 27 N. Y. 297; L. 1848, Act of Feb. 27, § 12. A statute making corporate directors individually liable "for all the debts of the company" existing at the time of failure to file the corporation's annual report does not refer to claims of the directors themselves against the corporation. Briggs v. Easterly, 62 Barb. 51 (1872); L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. Neither a trustee of a corporation nor his assignee can hold a co-trustee for liability for the corporate debts (incurred while they were both trustees) by reason of failure to file the statutory report, because if this could be done, he could profit by his own default. Knox v. Baldwin, 80 N. Y. 610 (1880); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. To constitute a liability upon a corporate trustee for its debts because of its failure to file its annual report it must be averred that the debts existed at the time the default in making the report was made, or that they were contracted afterwards and before such report was published. Chambers v. Lewis, 28 N. Y. 454 (1863); Gen. Mfg. Act, § 35.

The question of liability of corporate officers who fail to file report required by statute, to surety or guarantor of corporate paper, is discussed in a note in 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 855.

§ 347. Id.: For Sale of Stock Which Do Not Own.—A director or officer of a stock corporation is guilty of a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment for not less than six months or by a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars or by both, who sells, or agrees to sell, or is directly or indirectly interested in the sale of any share of stock of such corporation, or in any agreement to sell the same, unless at the time of such sale or agreement he is an actual owner of such share.<sup>19</sup> A director of a corporation, i. e., any person having by law the direction or management of the affairs of a corporation by whatever name described, is deemed to have concurred in the violation of the provision of law just stated, either if present at a meeting of the directors at which any act, proceeding or omission of such directors constituting such violation occurs without at the time causing or in writing requiring his dissent therefrom to be entered on the minutes of the directors, or if absent from such meeting and the facts constituting such violation appear on the record or minutes of the proceedings of the board of directors and he remains a director of the corporation for six months thereafter without causing or in writing requiring his dissent from such violation to be entered upon such record of minutes.<sup>20</sup> A director is also deemed to have such a knowledge of the affairs of the corporation as to enable him to determine whether any act, proceeding or omission of its directors is a violation of the provision of law just stated.<sup>1</sup>

§ 350. Id.: For Transfer to Directors, Officers or Stockholders of Property of Corporation Not Paying Due Obligations.—The transfer, while insolvent or after failure to pay liabilities, by a corporation of its property is hereinafter discussed.<sup>9</sup> Every director or officer violating or concerned in the violations of the statute prohibiting the transfer by a corporation, its officers or directors, of any of its property to any of its officers, directors or stockholders, directly or indirectly, for the payment of any debt or upon any other consideration than the full value of the property paid in cash, when such corporation has refused to pay any of its notes or other obligations when due in lawful money of the United States, is personally liable to the creditors and stockholders of the corporation of which he is director or officer to the full extent of any loss they may respectively sustain by such violation.<sup>10</sup> The Municipal Court has jurisdiction of an action against directors of a corporation to hold them individually liable for transfers of its property by them while it was insolvent.<sup>11</sup> Those receiving money of a corporation are the ones from whom recovery must be had under the statute making every person receiving any property of a corporation by means of a transfer to its officers, directors, stockholders or creditors with intent to give a preference; and if the transferee is not in one of such groups and has received none of the corporate property, the statute does not apply.<sup>12</sup> A judgment creditor of a corporation, without assets as a result of a transfer thereof by its directors to themselves as stockholders, may have relief that the directors themselves personally pay his judgment against the corporation, and, if they do not, that the property transferred be held by them in trust for the corporation and subjected to satisfaction of his judgment by proper process.<sup>13</sup> In order to permit a recovery by a creditor of a corporation against a director, officer and stockholder for a transfer to him of corporate property while the corporation

§ 351. Id.: For Failure or Falsity of Certificate of Payment of Capital Stock.—The statute requires one-half of a corporation's capital stock to be paid in within one year of incorporation on penalty of its dissolution, and its directors within thirty days after such payment to make a certificate of the fact of such payment, signed and acknowledged by a majority of themselves and verified by the president or vice-president and secretary or treasurer, and to file it in the offices where the certificates of incorporation are filed; but the statute imposes no penalty upon them for not making and filing such certificate, though it does provide that the corporation's dissolution for any cause does not take away or impair any remedy against it, its stockholders or officers "for any liabilities incurred previous to its dissolution."<sup>19</sup>

§ 352. Id.: To One Becoming Creditor or Stockholder on Faith of False Representation In.—The officers and directors of a stock corporation signing any certificate, report or public notice made or given by them which is false in any material representation are jointly and severally personally liable to any person who has become a creditor or stockholder of the corporation upon the faith of any such certificate, report, notice or any material representation therein, and such liability exists to the amount of the debt contracted upon the faith thereof if not paid when due or of the damage sustained by any purchaser of or subscriber to its stock upon the faith thereof, and whether the contents of such certificate, report or notice or of any material representation therein has been communicated directly or indirectly to the person so becoming

<sup>19</sup> Bus. Corp. L. § 5 (L. 1909, c. 12). In this note are collected cases under former statutes which imposed penalties for failure to file or falsely to make a corporation's report of payment of its capital stock: A report, whether true or false made by a corporation, pursuant to statute, as to payment of its capital stock, is a compliance with so much of the law as requires it to be made. Bonnell v. Griswold, 89 N. Y. 122 (1882); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 15. A misstatement in a corporation's report of its capital stock is not equivalent to an entire failure of the company to make the required report, and does not per se render all the trustees liable. Pier v. Hanmore, 86 N. Y. 95 (1881); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, §§ 12, 15; L. 1853, c. 333 § 14. The report stated: "Capital stock, $60,000; capital paid in, $36,500; amount existing debts, $30,130.24."

a creditor or stockholder, provided he became such on the faith thereof; but no action can be maintained for a cause of action created by the liability aforesaid unless brought within two years from the time the certificate, report or public notice has been made, or given by the officers or directors of such corporation.<sup>20</sup>

<sup>20</sup> St. Corp. L. § 35 (L. 1909, c. 61). "The directors generally cannot know, and have not the ability or knowledge requisite to learn, by their own efforts, the true condition of the affairs of the company. They select agents in whom they have confidence, and largely trust to them. They publish their statements and reports, relying upon the figures and facts furnished by such agents; and if the directors, when actually cognizant of no fraud, are to be made liable in an action for fraud for any error or misstatement in such statements and reports, then we have a rule by which every director is made liable for any fraud that may be committed upon the company in the abstraction of its assets and diminution of its capital by any of its agents, and he becomes substantially an insurer of their fidelity;" and such is not the law. Wakeman v. Dalley, 51 N. Y. 27 (1872).

The following cases are instructive in considering the liability of directors and officers under the present statute because they were decided on an earlier law basically similar to the present statute (L. 1875, c. 611, § 21). The specific section under the earlier law read in whole: "If any certificate or report made, or public notice given, by the officers of any such corporation, shall be false in any material representation, all the officers who shall have signed the same shall be jointly and severally liable for all the debts of the corporation contracted while they are officers thereof."

A statute making a corporate officer liable while such for the corporate debts if a certificate, report or public notice is made or given by him which is "false in any material representation" is not unconstitutional. Huntington v. Attrill, 118 N. Y. 365, 23 N. E. 544 (1890); L. 1875, c. 611, § 21. In order to hold a corporate officer to his statutory liability while such for the corporate debts by reason of a certificate, report or public notice made or given by him which is "false in any material representation," it is not necessary that he have knowledge of the false statement. Huntington v. Attrill, 118 N. Y. 365, 23 N. E. 544 (1890); L. 1875, c. 611, § 21. The statute making corporate officers signing a false report or certificate liable for all corporate debts contracted while they are officers does not "cover debts of the corporation contracted before the making of the certificate or report." Torbett v. Godwin, 62 Hun, 407, 17 N. Y. Supp. 46 (1891); L. 1875, c. 611, § 21. "Thus, the intention was, first, to compel the filing of the report, to make the directors liable for all debts in case of failure in this particular and to continue this liability until compliance; then, upon compliance, to create a new liability in favor of all subsequent creditors who might possibly be affected by the falsity of any material representation in the report as filed." Torbett v. Godwin, 62 Hun, 407, 17 N. Y. Supp. 46 (1891); L. 1875, c. 611, § 21. An action against a director of a corporation by one of its creditors to recover statutory penalties for making and recording a false certificate that the corporation's capital stock had all been paid in must be tried in the county where the certificate is to be recorded. Taylor v. Attrill, 31 Hun, 132 (1883); L. 1875, c. 611, §§ 21, 37.

The following decisions were rendered under an act (L. 1848, c. 40, § 15, i. e., the Gen. Mfg. Act) in effect prior to the present statute and the later L. 1875, c. 611, § 21, supra; but similar in some degree to both such prior statutes; and the decisions may, therefore, be of help in interpreting the present law. The particular section of the act of 1848 read in whole: "If any certificate or report made, or public notice given, by the officers of any such company, in pursuance of the provisions of this act, shall be false in any material representation, all the officers who shall have signed the same, knowing it to be false, shall be jointly and severally liable for all the debts of the company contracted while they are stockholders or officers thereof." In seeking to hold a corporate officer individually liable for the corporation's debts on the ground that he joined in making and filing a false certificate that its capital stock had been paid in the plaintiff has the burden of establishing: "First, that the certificate filed was in point of fact false, and second, that with knowledge of its falsity the defendant signed it." Ferguson v. Gill, 74 Hun, 566, 26 N. Y. Supp. 596 (1893); L. 1848, c. 40, § 15. A person is not liable to suit for the debt of a corporation of which he is trustee because of the falsity of the report filed of its affairs unless the report was false, or the trustee signed it knowing it to be false, or he was guilty of fraud or bad faith. Butler v. Smalley, 101 N. Y. 71, 4 N. E. 104 (1885); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 15. In an action against trustees of a corporation to enforce their liability under the statute for making a false report of payment of its capital stock, the question is whether they signed the report "knowing it to be false", within the meaning of the statute; and they do not so sign it if they merely know that the whole capital has not been paid in, in cash, when the report says the capital has been fully paid in, but bad faith and an intent to deceive must also be shown. Bonnell v. Griswold, 89 N. Y. 122 (1882); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 15; L. 1853, c. 333. In order that a trustee of a corporation be held to have signed a report of its capital stock "knowing it to be false", so as to make him liable for corporate debts, there must be "a willful misrepresentation, with actual knowledge of its falsity, and not merely such constructive knowledge as can be imputed from the presumption that the officer signing the report knew the law and comprehended the precise import of the language used, when construed with reference to statutory provisions. . . . a general statement that so much capital had been paid in would not, in common parlance, be very far from correct, even though the capital had not been all paid in cash." Pier v. Hanmore, 86 N. Y. 95 (1881); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, §§ 12, 15; L. 1853, c. 333, § 14. The report stated: "Capital stock, $60,000; capital paid in, $36,500; amount existing debts, $30,130.24." A report of a company's capital stock that a certain amount of its capital stock is paid contains an untrue representation and material misrepresentation that it has been paid in cash, unless it is specified that the alleged payment consists of the issue of stock for property purchased. Pier v. Hanmore, 86 N. Y. 95 (1881); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, §§ 12, 15; L. 1853, c. 333, § 14. The report stated: "Capital stock, $60,000; capital paid in, $36,500; amount existing debts, $30,130.24." A report stating that a corporation's capital stock is a stated amount and that it has been "paid up in full" imports that it has been paid in cash, if it be not specified that the whole or part of it has been paid in property, and if some has been so paid, the report contains an untrue representation as to the amount of capital paid in, which is material. Bonnell v. Griswold, 89 N. Y. 122 (1882); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 15; L. 1853, c. 333. In determining whether a director had knowledge of the falsity of a report that his corporation's capital stock had been fully paid in, in an action to hold him for its indebtedness, the facts that he had seen the property for which the stock was issued, that he knew its character, that he knew a conduit passed title thereto to his corporation, that this conduit gave him a lot of stock gratis (as well as his corporation), and that he voted to pledge $70,000 of its bonds and $100,000 of its stock for a loan of $35,000, are all admissible. Blake v. Griswold, 103 N. Y. 429, 9 N. E. 434 (1886); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 15. An action under the statute imposing liability upon corporate officers for the corporation's debts as a penalty for a false report is penal and must be tried in the county where the cause of action arose, which is the county in which the false report is filed. Veeder v. Baker, 83 N. Y. 156 (1880); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 15; C. C. P. § 983. But under a more recent statute it has been held that an action against a treasurer of a corporation by one who bought its stock on the faith of a report of its affairs made by him pursuant to statute and alleged to be false is not penal, and need not be brought in the county where the cause of action arose. Hutchinson v. Young, 80 A. D. 246, 80 N. Y. Supp. 259 (1903); St. Corp. L. § 31 (L. 1892, c. 688); C. C. P. § 983. The right to enforce the liability imposed by statute on an officer for the debts of his corporation contracted while he is such if any certificate signed by him be materially false is not dependent upon the creditor's reliance upon such certificate or upon the creditor being the original creditor rather than the latter's assignee. Ferguson v. Gill, 64 Hun, 284, 19 N. Y. Supp. 149 (1892); L. 1848, c. 40, § 15. An action by a creditor of a corporation against its officers to recover the indebtedness by reason of their false statement of the amount of its capital paid in dies with the creditor. Brackett v. Griswold, 103 N. Y. 425, 9 N. E. 438 (1886); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 15. In an action to recover from a director the amount of his corporation's debt to the plaintiff because of a false annual report the corporate books are admissible to prove the falsity of the statement in the report of full payment of capital stock to some extent; the stock-book as presumptive evidence of the facts recorded and the minute books to show the corporate action as to the mode of payment of the capital stock, though not to show that the director in question was charged with actual knowledge of what transpired in his absence. Blake v. Griswold, 103 N. Y. 429, 9 N. E. 434 (1886); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 15. It is not essential, to relieve a corporate trustee from liability for his corporation's debts, for failure to make and file its annual report, that it be both made and filed within twenty days after the first of the year; it is sufficient if it be made within that time, and then filed within a reasonable time after the expiration of such period. Butler v. Smalley, 101 N. Y. 71, 4 N. E. 104 (1885); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 15. "To prepare a report for filing and publication, to place it in good faith in the hands of the secretary for deposit in the clerk's office and in the office of a newspaper," and its filing on February 13th, is a reasonable filing.

§ 353. Id.: For Misconduct and Mismanagement, Governing Statutes.—An action may be maintained against one or more trustees, directors, managers or other officers of a corporation to procure a judgment compelling the defendants to account for their official conduct, including any neglect of or failure to perform their duties, in the management and disposition of the funds and property committed to their charge; compelling the defendants to pay to the corporation which they represent, or to its creditors, any money and the value of any property which they have acquired to themselves or transferred to others or lost or wasted, by or through any neglect of or failure to perform, or by any other violation of, their duties; setting aside an alienation of property made by one or more trustees, directors, managers or other officers of a corporation contrary to a provision of law or for a purpose foreign to the lawful business and objects of the corporation, where the alienee knew of the purpose of the alienation; restraining and preventing such an alienation, where it is threatened or where there is good reason to apprehend that it will be made.<sup>2</sup> The Supreme Court also has and exercises jurisdiction in equity at the suit of a corporation or of a receiver or of a trustee in bankruptcy thereof, to compel one or more trustees, directors, managers or other officers of the corporation to account for injury to or losses of the funds, assets or property of the corporation caused by or through any neglect or failure of the defendants to perform, or for violation of, their duties.<sup>3</sup> When the Attorney-General has good reason to believe that an action can be maintained in behalf of the People of the State against the trustees, directors, managers or other officers of a corporation to procure a judgment to compel them to account for their official conduct; to pay over what they have acquired, transferred, lost or wasted through neglect of their duties; to suspend them for abuse of their trust; to remove them for misconduct and require a new election; to set aside or restrain alienation of property by them contrary to law, he must bring an action accordingly, or apply to a competent court for leave to bring an action, as the case requires, if, in his opinion, the public interest requires that an action should be brought, and if the case be one in which the action can be brought only by the Attorney-General in behalf of the People, if a creditor, stockholder, director or trustee of the corporation applies to him for that purpose and furnishes the security required by law, he must bring the action, or apply for leave to bring it, if he has good reason to believe that it can be maintained, and when such an application is made section nineteen hundred and eighty-six of the code of civil procedure applies thereto and to the action brought in pursuance thereof.<sup>4</sup> A defendant may be arrested in an action when it is brought to recover for money received or to recover property or damages for the conversion or misapplication of property and it is alleged in the complaint that the money was received or the property was embezzled or fraudulently misapplied by an officer or agent of a corporation in the course of his employment.<sup>5</sup>

In such a case, the attorney-general must, as a condition of bringing the action, require the relator to give satisfactory security to indemnify the people against the costs and expenses thereof. Where security is so given, all costs and disbursements taxed in favor of the plaintiff shall be payable to the relator." (As amend'd L. 1918, c. 104, effective Sept. 1, 1918.)

have acted in good faith.<sup>8</sup> A stockholder cannot maintain an action to recover damages from waste by his corporation's directors after the appointment of a receiver for it, even though the latter has refused to bring the action, if the receiver, with approval of court, has transferred the corporate property under a contract which, among other things, released the directors from any personal liability for their acts as such.<sup>9</sup> An action by a stockholder "in his own behalf . . . and in behalf of all others similarly situated, against defendants, who were directors . . . , to call them to account as trustees for the manner in which they have discharged their trust" is one of which a court of equity has jurisdiction, although there may be issues which ought to be tried by jury and may be ordered to be so tried.<sup>10</sup> An action prosecuted in the name of the People by the Attorney-General pursuant to statute to compel directors to account for their conduct and disposition of corporate funds is in the right of the corporation and for its benefit, and the statute gives rise to no new cause of action except with respect to the removal or suspension of directors.<sup>11</sup> "The effect of this statute [giving the Supreme Court equity jurisdiction over accountings by corporate officers] is to do away with the distinctions recognized . . . between strict actions for an accounting of property actually received and for wrongful acts, and to authorize a single comprehensive action in equity in which the directors or officers of a corporation may be called to account for all of their acts while in office, whether the said acts consisted of the actual misappropriation of funds or mere negligence or neglect of duty, resulting in damage."<sup>12</sup>

though constituting several independent causes of action in favor of a corporation, may be so connected as to constitute a single cause of action in favor of a shareholder against all of the wrongdoers . . . .<sup>18</sup> For acts of nonfeasance corporate directors are liable to an action at law for damages and not to a suit in equity, for an accounting, etc.; though if the complaining stockholders have to come into equity anyway, they may obtain relief in that suit against those directors.<sup>19</sup> A corporation may sue one of its directors who was a stockholder in one of its subsidiary corporations for damage caused it through depreciation in the value of stock in the subsidiary corporation due to the alleged embezzlement by the manager of the subsidiary company of moneys of the plaintiff corporation and their application by him, with the alleged acquiescence of such defendant director, and the latter's failure to advise the plaintiff corporation thereof. Such an action does not contravene the rule that a stockholder, merely as such, cannot have an action in his own behalf against one who has injured the corporation, however much the wrongful acts have depreciated the value of his shares, because in such case the stockholder sues another's agent, e. g., the directors of a company, while in an action such as the one approved, the stockholder is suing its own agent on the ground that its agent (a director) is liable to it for failure to take the same care of its property that men of ordinary and average prudence take of their own property.<sup>20</sup> " . . . where the action is to hold persons responsible to the receiver of a corporation for a neglectful and wrongful performance of their duties as directors and to recover the losses sustained by the corporation, the action is one at law and . . . something more is required to warrant the intervention of a court of equity, than mere allegations showing that the acts complained of are numerous and complicated; that they are difficult of ascertainment, without a discovery with respect to them, and that a multiplicity of actions would be necessary, if all the directors, who were in office during the whole or a part of the time within which the acts complained of were committed, could not be associated as defendants in one action. . . . holder against the directors of his corporation, for violations of their duties, or breaches of the trust committed to them, is well settled . . . . But . . . there is a wide and vital difference between such a case and one where the action is by the corporation against its delinquent directors. . . . In such actions as these the defendants, as directors, are not proceeded against, strictly, as trustees, but as agents acting for a principal and for any damage caused by their neglect and violation of duty the remedy at law is adequate. . . ."<sup>1</sup> A stockholder in a corporation owning a controlling interest in another corporation cannot hold the directors of his corporation individually liable for negligence on the ground that they did not prevent or seek to recover a loan made by such other corporation to some of its directors in an alleged illegal manner, unless it be alleged and proven that the directors of such stockholder's corporation were guilty of a breach of trust in failing to embark on a litigation to prevent or recover such loan.<sup>2</sup>

§ 356. Id.: Under Statute.—The grounds for an action against a corporation's trustees, directors, managers or other officers are to make them account for their official conduct, including any neglect of or failure to perform their duties, in the management and disposition of the funds and property committed to their charge; to make them pay to the corporation or its creditors any money and the value of any property they have acquired to themselves or transferred to others or lost or wasted, by or through any neglect of or failure to perform or other violation of their duties; to set aside an alienation of property made by them contrary to a provision of law or for a purpose foreign to the lawful business and objects of the corporation, where the alienee knew the purpose of the alienation, or to restrain and prevent such an alienation, where it is threatened, or where there is good reason to apprehend that it will be made;<sup>3</sup> and to compel them to account for injury to or losses of the funds, assets or property of the corporation caused by or through any neglect or failure of the defendants to perform, or for violation of, their duties.<sup>4</sup> In order to hold a director liable for official misconduct under the statute not merely misfeasance but actual malfeasance in proper to make a stockholder a party defendant to an action brought by his corporation against its president and treasurer, at his request, to recover for their mismanagement, if he has discontinued a representative action against it and them because he failed to make a demand that it bring such an action; if his request that he be permitted, on giving bond of indemnity to the corporation, to conduct the present action by the corporation, instituted at his request, be refused; and if the attorney employed by the corporation as plaintiff be the same as represented it and the president and treasurer as defendants in the stockholder's discontinued action.<sup>6</sup>

In a representative stockholders' action by one stockholder on behalf of the corporation against its officers for dereliction of duty by them, seeking substantially a legal remedy, though necessarily brought in equity because the corporation itself will not sue, another stockholder against whom no relief is sought cannot intervene as a party defendant.<sup>7</sup> In an action by a stockholder against the officers and directors of his own company to prevent them from calling a stockholders' meeting to approve a sale of the corporate property to a second corporation at a less price than has been offered therefor by a third corporation, the second corporation cannot intervene; if such stockholders' meeting is essential to the sale.<sup>8</sup> It is proper to grant an order bringing in as party defendant a receiver of a company appointed after the action was begun if it is by certain stockholders representing all stockholders based on the mis- and mal-feasance of the corporate directors, as the recovery inures to the corporation's benefit and the receiver is entitled to possession of any such recovery.<sup>9</sup>

A cause of action to set aside a written contract entered into between a corporation and one of its directors in partial execution of a conspiracy whereby assets were wrongfully to be diverted to him is properly united with a cause of action to compel the corporate directors to account for the injurious results of the arrangement of which the agreement was a part.<sup>10</sup> A cause of action by a shareholder to compel an accounting by corporate directors for their acts and restitution by them of property wrongfully received by them cannot person and not against a multitude of people.<sup>16</sup> "Where an equitable action is commenced to require the officers or trustees of a corporation to account to the corporation for a breach of their trust, allegations as to the dealings of the officers or trustees of the corporation with the corporate property would seem to be material and proper allegations in the complaint"; and the court should be careful about ordering them stricken out.<sup>17</sup> Granting that a corporation may sue its directors in equity to recover losses sustained through their negligence, and also granting (what is most doubtful) that the facts plead in a particular case suffice to support the action as an equitable one as well as one at law, yet if the prayer for relief be appropriate only to an action at law, it will be held such.<sup>18</sup> In an action by a stockholder as representative of all others similarly situated for an accounting because of misfeasance by defendants it must be alleged that the latter are, or were at the time complaint is made of the corporate action, directors of the corporation, as the fact that they were stockholders does not make them liable.<sup>19</sup>

" . . . a stockholder has a remedy for losses sustained by the fraudulent acts, and for the misapplication or waste of corporate funds and property by an officer of a corporation: but . . . an action for injuries caused by such misconduct must be brought in the name of the corporation, unless such corporation or its officers, upon being applied to for such a purpose by a stockholder, refuse to bring such action. In that contingency, and then only, can a stockholder bring an action for the benefit of himself and others similarly situated, and in such an action the corporation must necessarily be made a party defendant. When a stockholder brings such an action, the complaint should allege that the corporation, on being applied to, refuses to prosecute; and as this averment constitutes an essential element of the cause of action, the complaint is defective and insufficient without it." stockholder for "the loss of the corporate funds, resulting from the misconduct of" individual directors, the cause of action primarily is in the corporation and no stockholder can maintain an action for the loss he has individually suffered in the depreciation of the value of the share stock held by him; but "the action must be brought not only on behalf of the plaintiff [stockholder], but also on behalf of all the other stockholders of the company . . . It is quite plain that the complaint in such an action should set forth but two things: First, the cause of action in favor of the corporation, which should be stated in exactly the same manner and with the same detail of facts as would be proper in case the corporation itself had brought the action; second, the facts which entitle the plaintiff to maintain the action in place of the corporation, that he is a stockholder therein, and that the corporation itself has either refused or unreasonably failed to bring the action."<sup>1</sup> In a stockholder's representative suit against the corporation's directors based on fraud and a substantial misappropriation of the corporation's stock through a nominal purchase of property and the payment of a pretended claim for services two things must be set forth: "first, a cause of action in favor of the corporation with the same detail of facts as would be proper in case the corporation itself had brought the action; second, the facts which entitle the plaintiff to maintain the action in place of the corporation."<sup>2</sup> An action by a stockholder seeking to recover for the corporation from its directors money owing it from them can be maintained only by establishment of a cause of action in the corporation's favor and of the facts entitling the stockholder to sue in its stead.<sup>3</sup> The complaint in a representative action by a stockholder to enjoin acts of the officers of the corporation and to compel them to account as such should allege "(1) the cause of action in favor of the corporation, which should be stated in exactly the same manner and with the same detail of facts as would be proper in case the corporation had brought the action; (2) the facts which entitle the plaintiff to

Directors not parties to an action cannot be examined because their corporation is a party.<sup>19</sup> When the claim of one suing directors for waste of assets is in his complaint that he is a stockholder (as well as other things) and the directors deny his standing as stockholder, an order for their examination before trial cannot be limited to the sole issue of his standing as stockholder but should permit their examination as to the waste alleged, within reasonable limits.<sup>20</sup> Before an obligation to disclose the affairs of a corporation to a stockholder suing directors for waste can arise which they must satisfy in his attempt to secure their examination before trial to frame his complaint, a demand and proper reason must be shown.<sup>1</sup>

If one creditor of a corporation bring a representative action after its dissolution to hold its directors to personal liability under its charter and the action is discontinued after being dismissed on appeal, the plaintiff need not pay to other creditors money received by him in settlement from the defendants after such dismissal.<sup>2</sup>

An action by one stockholder in behalf of himself and other stockholders against directors as trustees to call them to account for the manner in which they discharged their trust is an equitable action governed by the ten year statute of limitations, and not by the three year statute of limitations governing "an action against a director . . . to enforce a liability created by law," as the "law" referred to in this latter statute is a statute law and not the common law under which such an equitable accounting is had.<sup>3</sup> When other stockholders become parties to a representative action by one of their number to call directors to account for the discharge of their trust the same limitation of time is applicable to them for bringing the action as is applicable to the original plaintiff.<sup>4</sup> An action for recovery of damages by a receiver of a corporation against its directors because of their waste of its assets is barred by the six year statute of limitations.<sup>5</sup> "A corporation may have a cause of action in equity for an accounting against one or more directors for an accounting with respect to property of the corporation that has actually came into his or their hands, or for a fraudulent breach of trust with respect to the management of the corporation or its property, and for the recovery of property lost and incidental damages (citations). It may also have one or more causes of action at law against one or more directors for damages sustained by the corporation in consequence of his or their wrongful or negligent official acts falling within the terms misfeasance or nonfeasance (citations). A suit in equity may not be joined with an action at law against the same directors (citation). In some of the cases, on the particular facts arising therein, it has been held that there is a concurrent remedy at law and in equity, and in such cases equity applies the statute of limitations that would govern at law."<sup>6</sup> The statute of limitations and not laches determines if a cause of action is barred, if it seeks to enforce a legal right, to wit, the right of a corporation to recover from individuals damages resulting from their misuse of its assets, even though the enforcement of such right is sought in equity (where an accounting may be had to ascertain the sum of the damages.)<sup>7</sup>

§ 363. Id.: Under Statute.—In all actions against corporate directors, trustees, managers or other officers for their misconduct or negligence, whether in equity by the corporation, its receiver or its trustee in bankruptcy, or by the Attorney-General in behalf of the People of the State or a corporate creditor or a corporate trustee, director, manager or other officer having a general superintendence of its concerns, the court, upon the application of either party, must make an order directing the trial by jury of the issue of negligence or neglect or failure to perform their duties; and for that purpose the questions to be tried must be prepared and settled as prescribed in section nine hundred and seventy of the Code of Civil Procedure.<sup>8</sup> In an action brought to procure a judgment to compel the trustees, directors, managers or other officers of a corporation to account for their official conduct, or to pay over what they have themselves acquired, wasted, etc., or to suspend them for abuse of trust, or to remove them for misconduct and direct a new election, or to set aside or restrain an alienation of property unlawfully made or contemplated by them, or to account for injury or loss resulting from their failure to perform, or violation of, their duties, a stockholder is not excused from answering a question relating to the management of the corporation or the transfer or disposition of its property on the ground that his answer may expose the corporation to a forfeiture of any of its corporate rights, or will tend to convict him of a criminal offense, or to subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but his testimony must not be used as evidence against him in a criminal action or special proceeding.<sup>9</sup> In an action brought to procure a judgment to compel the trustees, directors, managers or other officers of a corporation to account for their official conduct, or to pay over what they have themselves acquired, wasted, etc., or to suspend them for abuse of trust, or to remove them for misconduct and direct a new election, or to set aside or restrain an alienation of property unlawfully made or contemplated by them, or to account for an injury or loss resulting from their failure to perform, or violation of, their duties, the court may in its discretion on the application of either party at any stage of the action before or after final judgment and with or without security grant an injunction order restraining the creditors of the corporation from bringing actions against the defendants or any of them for the recovery of a sum of money, or from taking any further proceedings in such actions there-

tofore commenced; and such an injunction has the same effect, and is subject to the same provisions of law as if each creditor upon whom it is served was named therein and was a party to the action in which it is granted.<sup>10</sup> In an action brought to procure a judgment to compel the trustees, directors, managers or other officers of a corporation to account for their official conduct, or to pay over what they have themselves acquired; wasted, etc., or to suspend them for abuse of trust, or to remove them for misconduct and direct a new election, or to set aside or restrain an alienation of property unlawfully made or contemplated by them, or to account for an injury or loss resulting from their failure to perform, or violation of, their duties, the court may, at any stage of the action, before or after final judgment, make an order requiring all the creditors of the corporation to exhibit and prove their claims, and thereby make themselves parties to the action, in such manner and in such a reasonable time, not less than six months from the first publication of notice of the order, as the court directs; and that the creditors who make default in so doing shall be precluded from all benefit of the judgment and from any distribution which may be made thereunder; except that, notwithstanding such order any such creditor who may exhibit and prove his claim in the manner directed by the order, with proof by affidavit or otherwise that he has had no notice or knowledge thereof in time to comply therewith, is entitled at any time before an order is made directing a final distribution of the assets of such corporation to have his claim received, and has the same rights and benefits thereon, so far as the assets of such corporation then remaining undistributed may render possible, as if his claim had been exhibited and proved within the time limited by such order.<sup>11</sup> Notice of the order must be given by publication in such newspapers and for such length of time as the court directs.<sup>12</sup>

An action in the name of the People brought by the Attorney-General pursuant to statute to compel directors to account for their conduct and disposition of corporate funds is subject to the general rules of pleading.<sup>13</sup> An action under statutory authority brought by the Attorney-General in the name of the People for removal or suspension of a director must be in equity because of the nature of the relief demanded, and doubtless may be joined with a cause of action against the same director for an accounting.<sup>14</sup> In decreeing that directors may be brought to account in action by the People the Legislature did not intend that they be required when sued to account as trustees of an express trust, without need of specifying anything more than the fact that they are directors; because, while directors who have gone out of office as well as those in office may be compelled to account, it is incumbent on the plaintiff to allege the facts constituting the negligence, misconduct, mal- or non-feasance for which the directors are sought to be held.<sup>15</sup> A judgment creditor unknown to his corporate debtor at the time of a transfer of all its assets, amounting in effect to its dissolution, may hold its directors for the value of the property transferred by them equal to the amount of his claim and is not bound to go against the transferee which agreed to assume the debts of the transferer.<sup>16</sup> While it is doubtless true that an action cannot be maintained under the statute by a creditor individually to compel the officers, etc., of the debtor corporation to account for their acts and to pay anything they have acquired or transferred to others in violation of their duties, but must be brought as a representative action, if it is made to appear that the rights of other creditors are involved or should be provided for, yet such a point must be raised by the answer, and cannot be considered if not put in issue until the appeal is taken.<sup>17</sup> One seeking to hold a stockholder and president of a corporation for a claim against it under the statute cannot do so by seeking only to recover the exact balance due on his claim, irrespective of the rights of other creditors or of the proportion which his claim may bear to the total corporate indebtedness, but must bring a representative action, describing himself in his representative capacity.<sup>18</sup> In attempting to join causes of action against directors in a statutory action to compel them to account for their conduct it must be borne in mind that a cause of action against all the members of the board for their individual acts during a particular period would not affect defendants who were members of a preceding or succeeding board and that official acts of directors, whether of mal- or non-feasance, separate and disconnected, cannot be said either to have arisen out of the same transaction or out of transactions connected with the same subject of action, the subject of each cause of action being the particular loss or damage sustained by the official misconduct of the directors in office at a given time, who may be jointly and severally, or only severally, liable and accountable to the corporation.<sup>19</sup> The statutory liability of corporate directors to account for their acts and pay anything they have acquired or transferred in violation of their duties is several, and a creditor may proceed against one or more of them who are liable without joining them all.<sup>20</sup> The statute authorizes an action against a single guilty director, without joining his co-directors.<sup>1</sup> In an action by the Attorney-General under the statute all officers or directors who have, by their acts or omissions, caused a loss to result, although at different times, may not be joined and the separate instances of loss are to be treated as separate causes of action, not as necessary allegations of fact to support one cause of action for an accounting.<sup>2</sup> A reference cannot be ordered in an action to compel corporate officers to account for official misconduct until some proof of such misconduct has been adduced and a determination to that effect is reached by the trial judge and put in the form of an interlocutory judgment directing the account.<sup>3</sup>

Even if part of the relief could be had in actions at law, still, when it is sought in connection with strictly equitable relief, such as the discovery of trust property and the recovery thereof, and the right to all relief springs from a common cause, such as a conspiracy, all may be included in the sweeping action for an accounting.”<sup>5</sup> A prayer for judgment in an action by a corporation or its receivers against its directors for recovery of money lost to it through their negligence, mis- or mal-feasance, cannot be said to be for equitable relief if no accounting or discovery is demanded, and the relief asked is that the damages be ascertained and when ascertained that the plaintiff have judgment against the defendants therefor.<sup>6</sup> “. . . while . . . a receiver should not be appointed to take possession of the property of a corporation on the application of a stockholder charging fraud against some of the trustees or directors, . . . such directors may . . . be restrained by injunction, from committing any such fraudulent acts, on the application of a stockholder; but such injunction should not apply to the general business of the corporation, but to the particular acts complained of.”<sup>7</sup> A receivership of a corporation and an injunction against creditors prosecuting their claims should not be continued in an action for waste of its assets and mismanagement and accounting by its directors after they have

§ 365. Id.: Under Statute.—The statutes permit judgment that the corporate trustees, directors, managers or other officers account for their official conduct, including any neglect of or failure to perform their duties, in the management and disposition of the funds and property, committed to their charge; that they pay the corporation or its creditors any money and the value of any property they have acquired to themselves or transferred to others or lost or wasted, by or through any neglect of, a failure to perform, or by other violation of, their duties; that an alienation of property made by them be set aside if made contrary to a provision of law or for a purpose foreign to the lawful business and objects of the corporation, when the alienee knew the purpose of the alienation; that such an alienation be restrained and prevented, when it is threatened or there is good reason to apprehend that it will be made; and that they be compelled to account for injury to or losses of the funds, assets or property of the corporation caused by or through any neglect or failure of the defendants to perform, or for violation of, their duties—depending in each case upon who brings the suit.<sup>10</sup> “The suspension or removal of the directors [of a corporation can] . . . only be had in an action brought by the Attorney-General . . . , but it is competent for a court of equity at the suit of a stockholder to enjoin threatened acts of mismanagement or waste or to appoint a receiver of the corporate property to hold and manage it until a new election of directors, where it satisfactorily appears that the directors are acting fraudulently or in bad faith and in their own interest and contrary to the plain interests of the corporation and that such relief is necessary to the protection of the rights of stockholders in the interim (citations); but it is manifest that the appointment of a receiver for such purpose, as dis-

§ 366. Agents: Employment and Compensation.—The courts will not review the propriety of compensation to be paid by a corporation to a manager under a contract made by stockholders.<sup>14</sup> One made general manager of a corporation immediately before passage of a resolution of its board that “the salary of the general manager for the ensuing year is fixed at $2,000, payable in monthly installments” is engaged for a year, if a general manager is not provided for in the by-laws, and is not employed for a period terminable at the board’s pleasure.<sup>15</sup> In the absence of being able to ascertain from the language of the contract itself what the intent of the parties was, it is a question of fact for the jury to decide whether or not, after one has entered into a contract of employment with a corporation by the terms of which he is to receive by way of compensation a certain share of its profits, it can, without his consent, increase its capital stock and thereby deprive him of a certain proportion of the profits which he would have been entitled to receive had the capital remained at the same amount as when the contract was entered into.<sup>16</sup> "Where a person is employed for a corporation by persons assuming to act in its behalf, and renders services, with the knowledge of its officers, and without objection on their part, and without notice that the contract is not recognized, and the corporation accepts the benefits of the services, the corporation will be held to have sanctioned the contract and will be compelled to pay for the services (citations). Even if the corporation were not in existence at the time of the employment, and the . . . persons were not the agents of an existing corporation, but only promoters of a prospective corporation, the . . . corporation would seem to be liable, as it has been held that a preliminary agreement made by promoters, the promoters and incorporators being the same persons and the only stockholders of the corporation, is binding on the corporation."<sup>17</sup> ". . . where a person is employed for a corporation, by one assuming to act in its behalf, and goes on and renders the services according to the agreement, with the knowledge of its officers, and without notice that the contract is not recognized as valid and binding, such corporation will be held to have sanctioned and ratified the contract, and be compelled to pay for the services, according to the agreement."<sup>18</sup>

§ 367. Id.: Proof of Authority.—"Every one knows that corporations are artificial creations existing by virtue of law, and organized for purposes defined in their charters; and he who deals with one of them is chargeable with notice of the purpose for which it was formed; and when he deals with agents or officers of one of them, he is bound to know their powers and the extent of their authority. Corporations, like natural persons, are bound only by the acts and contracts of their agents done and made within the scope of their authority (citation). . . . charge of the office to some particular party as a proper person for the transaction of the particular business in hand, the presumption must be that such person is authorized to bind the corporation.”<sup>20</sup> Applying the familiar doctrine of agency (to a claim that an act done in a corporation’s name and under corporate seal by its subordinate agents is void because without due authority from it) that a principal cannot dispute an agent’s power if he approve it or ratify the act done, “the ratification need not be declared in express terms. Mere silence and acquiescence will in many cases be sufficient. So it may be inferred from the acts and proceedings of the principal in pais. When he receives and appropriates the proceeds of a transaction done in his name and by his assumed authority, there exists the highest possible evidence of his approval. These rules . . . are also as plainly applicable to corporate as to other transactions where the dealing is within the powers of the corporation.”<sup>21</sup> “. . . in order to bind a corporation it is necessary to prove that the one who it is claimed acted for the corporation had authority, either express or implied, to do so; and where it is sought to hold a corporation in any transaction, it is incumbent upon the one alleging the fact to show that the person who claimed to act for it had authority, express or implied, to represent and bind it.”<sup>22</sup> One suing a corporation on a contract on the ground that it was made by its authorized agent may prove the latter’s authority by circumstances and conditions which would lead a reasonable man to conclude that he was acting within the authority apparently recognized by the corporation.<sup>3</sup> An approval by a corporation of a special contract arranged by a manager of one of its departments with one of its employees results from payment by it of the expenses of exhibiting the goods agreed to be made by such contract.<sup>4</sup>

“ . . . it is not to be inferred as a matter of law that an agent who was a mere general manager of a business, by which term is meant one charged with the executive administration of the current business of the corporation, has the authority to bind his principal to any contract [of employment] to run for a series of years, in the absence of proof of authority to make such a contract;” and “ while such an authority may be inferred from evidence of acts of the general manager, known to and acquiesced in by the officers of the corporation,” yet proof that its president was in and out and saw the employed person rendering services and that the letter of the manager containing the contract was copied in the corporation’s letter-book is insufficient to show ratification by it.<sup>5</sup> A resolution by a corporate board of directors ratifying an act of its agent is competent evidence of his authority; and although it may never have been communicated to the other party to the transaction, yet an acquiescence by the corporation in the transaction results from its acting under it on the terms proposed by the other party.<sup>6</sup> “ The recognition by a corporation of acts on the part of an agent, similar in character to those which may be in dispute, tends strongly to establish the agent’s authority.”<sup>7</sup> “ The powers of the agent of a corporation are such as he is allowed by the directors or managers of the corporation to exercise within the limits of the charter; and the silent acquiescence of the directors or managers may be as effectual to clothe the agent with power as an express letter of attorney.”<sup>8</sup> “ The authority of the agent could be properly proved only by the production of the power of attorney issued to him by the company upon his appointment, or by a resolution of the defendant’s board of directors, under which agents were employed by them and prescribing their powers and duties.”<sup>9</sup> prevented his making the contract in question. The man was to sell out his property to the corporation after he had done certain work which was a condition to his owning it. Before this happened he orally represented to a vendor that he was such corporate manager. The suit was for the purchase price.

for whose benefit the action is prosecuted, the executive agent of a corporation may sue in his own name to recover on subscription notes purporting on their face to be made with him as executive agent of a corporation whereby the defendant promised to pay money in exchange for stock.<sup>17</sup> An auditor of a corporation authorized by its president to settle an alleged cause of action against it for a stated sum acts within the scope of his apparent authority so as to bind it when he agrees also to pay the expenses of the claimant's recovery from injuries suffered by the alleged negligence of the company on which the action is based.<sup>18</sup> Authority from a corporation to an agent to negotiate its bonds at not less than par and accrued interest for the purpose of raising money to pay its floating debts empowers him only to sell them for money or to dispose of them so as to pay the company's debts, and does not permit him to pledge them to secure its prior debts; and if such pledge is made, the pledgee cannot share in the proceeds of the mortgage sale, as the bonds pledged are not the company's legal obligations.<sup>19</sup> It seems that the position of salesman for a corporation gives the incumbent no implied authority to make a contract by the year for the advertisement of its goods by another.<sup>20</sup>

§ 370. Id.: Service of Process Upon To Bind Corporation, Governing Statutes.—The service of process in actions against corporations is generally discussed in the four hundred and forty-third section of this book. Personal service of a summons upon a defendant domestic stock corporation must be made by delivering a copy of it within New York State to the president or other head of the corporation, the secretary or clerk to the corporation, the cashier, the treasurer, or a director or managing agent.<sup>3</sup>

§ 371. Id.: In General.—The court has no power, in an action initiated by service of process upon an individual as sole defendant, to substitute a corporation as defendant and order that the service on the individual stand as personal service on the corporation of which he is president and principal stockholder.<sup>4</sup>

§ 372. Id.: As Managing Agent.—Personal service of a summons on a defendant domestic corporation may be made by delivering a copy thereof within the state to its managing agent.<sup>5</sup> A general superintendent of the work of operating the lines of a corporation, given that title to distinguish him from superintendents of divisions of its lines and from superintendents of other departments of business, is a managing agent of the company within the meaning of the code provision permitting service of process on a domestic corporation upon its managing agent.<sup>6</sup> “ . . . when the corporation has an office in this State where a substantial portion of its business is transacted by a person designated by itself as a general agent, although followed by words indicating some one department,” the corporation is properly served with process by service thereof upon him as a “managing agent.”<sup>7</sup> One designated as a domestic corporation’s “Assistant Superintendent,” who has no general authority the transfer of any such bond or other evidence of debt, is guilty of forgery in the third degree and upon conviction, in addition to the punishment prescribed in section eight hundred and ninety-three of the Penal Law for that offense, may also be sentenced to pay a fine not exceeding three thousand dollars.<sup>9</sup> Corporate officers who have issued "false certificates of stock authenticated by them as genuine, and cast them upon the market with fraudulent intent, are liable to every holder to whose hands they may come by fair purchase."<sup>10</sup>

The subject of fraud and deceit in the purchase and sale of stock has been previously considered.<sup>11</sup>

There is no basis for an action against an officer of a corporation in his individual capacity for the recovery of damages sustained by a subscriber to the corporation's stock through his fraud and deceit in inducing purchase of the stock when he but made a written statement of its indebtedness for the purchaser even though he omitted therefrom the amount involved in a pending action against the company for the reason that he opined it would not be held in final judgment; because the mere presentation of such a statement does not amount to an affirmation that it is true to his knowledge.<sup>12</sup> "The mere fact of being a director and stockholder is not per se sufficient to hold a party liable for the frauds and misrepresentations of the active managers of a corporation. Some knowledge of and participation in the act claimed to be fraudulent must be brought home to the person charged. . . . It is only when a director lends his name and influence to promote a fraud upon the community, or is guilty of some violation of law or other mismanagement, that he is personally liable."<sup>13</sup> The rule that the mere fact of being a director is not per se sufficient to render a party liable for the fraud and misrepresentation of the active managers of a corporation or the fraudulent representations of an agent employed to market its stock has no application when the inference is not permissible from the evidence that the managers or agents in question were those of the corporation rather than of those promoting it.<sup>14</sup> "It is hardly necessary to say that a director of a company who knowingly agent to run the corporation that the sale of the stock was accomplished by false statements, as the obligation of a director applies to prospective as well as existing stockholders.<sup>19</sup> One purchasing the stock control of a corporation through negotiations with its directors who in turn obtained the consent of the stockholders individually to sell their holdings at the agreed price cannot hold one of the directors who took no active part in the management of the corporation and no part at all in such negotiations and consent purely as an individual to sell him stock for fraudulent representations made in such negotiations.<sup>20</sup> Neglect of duty, misconduct and indifference in their position as directors may subject those who are directors to any statutory penalty and to liability to one who became stockholder by reason of fraud perpetrated under color of their names for any losses sustained by him; but to admit of such directors being compelled to return to him not only his damages but his entire investment and to assume his holdings, the law requires that he should establish he was the intentional and not merely the incidental victim of such directors' delinquency.<sup>1</sup> regulation of the business and the conduct of the affairs of the corporation, and any limitation upon its powers or the powers of its directors and stockholders which does not exempt them from the performance of any obligation or the performance of any duty imposed by law.<sup>1</sup> An injunction order suspending the general and ordinary business of a corporation can be granted only by the court upon notice of the application therefor to the proper officer of the corporation; and if such an injunction order is made otherwise than this way it is void.<sup>2</sup> No corporation engaged in carrying on public work under contract with the State or with any municipal corporation of the State, either as a contractor or subcontractor therewith, can directly or indirectly conduct or carry on what is commonly known as a company store if there is at the time any store selling supplies within two miles of the place where such contract is being executed; and any corporation violating the prohibitions recited is guilty of a misdemeanor.<sup>3</sup> The powers and contracts of a corporation incorporated in this State are to be determined by New York law.<sup>4</sup> "Acts done by a corporation, which presuppose the existence of other acts to make them legally operative, are presumptive proofs of the latter."<sup>5</sup> The acts of corporations may be proved in the same manner as the acts of individuals; and if there be no record evidence they may be proved by the testimony of witnesses, and even by facts and circumstances from which the acts may be inferred, when no direct evidence of them can be given.<sup>6</sup> "The powers of corporations are those enumerated in the statutes under which they are incorporated, in general statutes, in the articles of association, and like instruments executed in pursuance of the statutes . . . , and also such powers as flow from or are incidental and necessary to the exercise of the enumerated powers."<sup>7</sup> " . . . corporations, in the absence of restrictions imposed by statute, have the power necessary to enable them to transact the business authorized by their charter.”<sup>8</sup> “When we speak of the powers of a corporation, the term only expresses the privileges and franchises which are bestowed in the charter; and when we say it cannot exercise other powers, the just meaning of the language is, that as an attempt to do so is without authority of law, the performance of unauthorized acts is a usurpation which may be a wrong to the State; or, perhaps, to the shareholders. But the usurpation is possible.”<sup>9</sup> “Corporations, together with the express and substantive powers conferred by their charters, take by implication all the reasonable modes of executing such powers which a natural person may adopt in the exercise of similar powers.”<sup>10</sup> “Corporations possess only such powers as are expressly granted by legislative enactment, together with such others as are necessarily or fairly implied in or are incidental to the powers thus granted or essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation. The only exception to this rule is furnished by private corporations, which may exercise many extraordinary powers, provided all its stockholders assent and none of its creditors are injured. Under these circumstances there is no one to complain except the State, and the business being entirely private the State does not interfere.”<sup>11</sup> A stock corporation may guarantee the purchases made under a trust by which vendors sell equipment to a trustee which leases it to such corporation and other corporations controlled by it which pay the trustee such rentals as eventually to pay off certificates issued by the trusts to purchase the equipment.<sup>12</sup> Corporations may agree to arbitrate and their submissions to arbitration need not be under their corporate seals.<sup>13</sup> It is unlawful for a corporation to make a lease of all its property for a period of over one year to an individual so as to suspend its business for the term of the lease and make itself a mere instrument in the hands of the lessee.<sup>14</sup> “Bills confiscating the property

meaning, as rules of construction are invoked only when the language used leaves its purpose and intent uncertain or questionable; and they cannot be resorted to for the purpose of enabling the courts to enlarge or extend the legislative design or intent.<sup>6</sup> The word "person" or "persons," when used in a statute, includes corporations.<sup>7</sup> A corporation is a "person" entitled to file a lien.<sup>8</sup> "Where the Legislature has once provided a special rule for a particular case, a general statute thereafter enacted, though broad enough in its terms to be applicable to the case, will not, from that fact alone, alter the special rule (citation); though, if there be a general clause in the same statute with a special clause, the latter shall not restrain the signification of the former (citation). It is still more reasonable, that where there has been a general enactment covering the subject in general, in terms which include the particular case, and there is a subsequent enactment which makes a rule for that particular, that the latter shall be held to be all that the legislature, at least, meant for the regulation of that case."<sup>9</sup> "When a statute amends a former statute 'so as to read as follows' it operates as a repeal by implication of inconsistent provisions therein omitted in the latter. When the amendatory act re-enacts provisions of the former law either ipsissimis verbis or by the use of equivalent though different words, the law will be regarded as having been continuous, and the new enactment, as to such parts, will not operate as a repeal, so as to affect a duty accrued under a prior law, although, as to all new transactions, the later law will be referred to as the ground of the obligation. The effect upon a prior statute of a subsequent amendment 'so as to read as follows' is not to be determined in all cases by any fixed and absolute rule, but frequently becomes a question of legislative intent to be determined from the nature and language of the amendment, from other acts passed at or about the same time and from all the circumstances of the case. The duty of the courts is to give effect to the legislative intent rather than the literal terms of the act.”<sup>10</sup> Broad words in a statute conferring powers and privileges on “a corporation” or on “any corporation” apply only to corporations organized under the laws of this State.<sup>11</sup> “As a corporation can act only in the mode and within the limitations prescribed by the law creating it, the same law may impose upon parties dealing with the corporation such restrictions as the enacting power deems proper, in preserving, applying, or subjecting its assets to the discharge of its obligations, and may, among other things, provide that any one, or more, of the usual remedies of creditors against a debtor, shall in certain cases be withheld.”<sup>12</sup> A corporation organized to print, publish and sell newspapers under statutes prohibiting the exercise of any power not necessary to the exercise of powers given it by its charter is not bound by its published agreement to pay the heir of anyone found dead, with a copy of the advertised agreement in his pocket, a stated sum, as the agreement is ultra vires.<sup>13</sup> A stock corporation organized under the Business Corporation Law cannot have the rights of a cemetery corporation.<sup>14</sup> contracts of corporations are said to be ultra vires when they involve some adventure or undertaking not within the scope of their charter, which is their rule of corporate action.”<sup>17</sup> “The term ultra vires is used in more than one sense. In the first place an act of a corporation is said to be ultra vires when it is not within the scope of the powers of the corporation to perform it under any circumstances, or for any purpose. An act is also said to be ultra vires, with reference to the rights of certain parties, when the corporation is not authorized to do the act without their consent, and the third, with reference to some specific purpose, when the corporation is not authorized to perform the act for that particular purpose, although the act itself may be for some purposes fully within the scope of the general powers of the corporation. In the last two cases, one who deals in good faith with a corporation having the apparent right to do the act, and who parts with anything of value to the corporation as a consideration for its promise, is permitted to say that the corporation is estopped from insisting that the act which was done for its benefit was beyond its power, and he will be at liberty to recover the value of the articles furnished or the work done for the corporation (citations). But every one who deals with a corporation is bound to take notice of its corporate powers, and if a reference to its charter shows that the act is not within the scope of its corporate authority, he must know that such act is void and that it cannot be made the basis of any claim against the corporation (citation), for . . . no sort of a ratification can make good the act which is without the scope of corporate authority.”<sup>18</sup>

“The words ultra vires and illegality represent totally different and distinct ideas. It is true a contract may have both those defects, but it may also have one without the other. . . . A corporation is not an agent of the State, or, in any strict sense, of the shareholders. But it derives its powers from the State, and it may transcend those powers for purposes which, in themselves considered, involve no public wrong. Contracts so made may be defective in point of authority, and may contemplate a private wrong to the shareholders; but they are not illegal, because they violate no public interest or policy . . . the illegality of an act is determined in its quality and does not depend on the person or being who performs it.”<sup>19</sup>

“ It is the undoubted right of stockholders to complain of any diversion of the funds to purposes unauthorized in the charter. . . . The original subscribers contribute the capital invested, and they and those who succeed to their shares are always, in equity, the owners of that capital. But, legally, the ownership is vested in the corporate body, impressed with the trusts and duties prescribed in the charter. In these relations we have the only true foundation of the plea of ultra vires. . . . It is not to be understood as an absolute and peremptory defence in all cases of excess of power, without regard to other circumstances and considerations. . . . If the person dealing with a corporation knows of the wrong done or contemplated, and he cannot show the acquiescence of the shareholders, he ought not to complain if he cannot enforce the contract.”<sup>20</sup>

“ The real ground upon which the defence of ultra vires rests, and the only one upon which it has ever, to any extent, been judicially based is, that the contracts of corporations which are unauthorized by their charters are to be regarded as illegal, and, therefore, void. There are three classes of illegal contracts, viz.: those which are malum in se, i. e., which embrace something which the law deems in and of itself criminal or immoral; second, those which violate the provisions of some statute, and are hence called mala prohibita; and, third, those which contravene some principle of public policy. Corporations may make contracts falling within either of the two first of these classes, and such contracts are no doubt subject to the same rules as if made by individuals. . . . But the contracts of corporations which are not authorized by their charters are illegal, because they are made in contravention of public policy.”<sup>1</sup> “ In suits between the corporation and strangers dealing with it, the question is whether the act is one the corporation is not authorized to perform under any circumstances; or one that it may perform for some purposes or under certain conditions. In the first case it is ultra vires and there can be no recovery; because the party dealing with the corporation is bound to know, from the law of its existence, that it has no power to perform it. In the second case, the issue will turn upon whether the party dealing with it is aware of the intention to perform the act for some unauthorized purpose, or whether the attendant circumstances justify its performance. In actions by stockholders, which assail the acts of their directors or trustees, courts will not interfere unless the powers have been illegally or unconscientiously executed, or unless it be made to appear that the acts were fraudulent or collusive and destructive of the rights of the stockholders. Mere errors of judgment are not sufficient as grounds for equity interference; for the powers of those entrusted with corporate management are largely discretionary.”<sup>2</sup> “It has been pointed out that the doctrine of ultra vires originated at a time when nearly all corporations were created for public purposes, and that there is slight reason why it should ever have been applied to private corporations — more than to individuals in a copartnership.”<sup>3</sup> engagement to pay the debt, and such engagement may be in any form which does not come within the prohibition of some particular statute.”<sup>18</sup> “The right of corporations in general to give a note, bond or other engagement to pay a debt is so nearly identical or so inseparably connected with the right to contract the debt that no doubt upon the question ought to be admitted. When a corporation can lawfully purchase property or procure money on loan in the course of its business, the seller or the lender may exact, and the purchaser or borrower must have the power to give, any known assurance which does not fall within the prohibition, express or implied, of some statute.”<sup>19</sup> “The word ‘obligation’ has many meanings and when used in a statute its significance must be gathered from and governed by the purpose and context of the enactment. In this statute [the sixth section of the Stock Corporation Law] it embraces all instruments in writing, however informal, and with or without seal, whereby the borrowing corporation contracts with a lender for the repayment of the sum borrowed. To borrow is the reciprocal action with to lend, and the idea of a borrowing is not filled out unless there is in the transaction a promise or understanding that what is borrowed will be repaid or returned, with or without compensation for the use of it in the meantime (citations). The right to borrow money given by the statute is a power to create an indebtedness and procure for its payment funds from others to be paid at a future date, with the power to issue obligations for the payment of the funds procured or borrowed. In substance, the money is borrowed from the purchasers of the obligations.”<sup>20</sup> A corporation has the implied power to borrow money from its stockholders as well as others if necessary to the conduct of its business.<sup>1</sup> It cannot be held as part of the implied power of a corporation to borrow money for the conduct of its business that it may give annually to such of its stockholders as advance money to it a fixed compensation, if there be no right to the stockholder ever to be repaid his advance.<sup>2</sup> A corporation cannot escape liability for a loan secured for it by an officer acting on behalf of it within the general scope of his powers of which it has received the benefit upon the ground that it had but two trustees whereas the statute regarding like corporations provides that there shall be at least three.<sup>3</sup> It is for the jury to say if a loan made in the presence of the secretary of a corporation who was intrusted with its general management to an individual for the corporation's use which was so used by it was secured by rents from its property which such individual in such secretary's presence undisputedly said were to be such security.<sup>4</sup>

§ 396. Id.: Usury.—The validity of a contract, questioned as usurious, depends on the institutions of the place where it is made, unless the loan is made by a corporation, when, if it be found that the contract is one it is forbidden by its act of incorporation to make, the loan and all the securities taken to enforce its reimbursement are necessarily void.<sup>5</sup> No corporation can interpose the defense of usury in any action.<sup>6</sup> It seems that the statute providing that "no corporation shall hereafter interpose the defense of usury" must be construed "as a repeal of the statutes of usury as to all contracts of corporations stipulating to pay interest, thus leaving the contracts in full force according to their terms;" and the statute is constitutional.<sup>7</sup> The statute forbidding a corporation to interpose the defense of usury also denies it the right to maintain an action to set aside any of its obligations as usurious.<sup>8</sup> The effect of the statute prohibiting the interposition by corporations of the defense of usury is "to prevent the avoidance by a corporation of its own contract, for the reason that it was made in contravention of the laws against usury;" and not merely that it cannot set up usury as a defense in an action against it.<sup>9</sup> A corporation is precluded from resisting payment of its own obligations on account of the fact that they have been discounted at a larger rate of interest than that authorized by law.<sup>10</sup> The statute providing that "no corporation shall hereafter interpose the defense of usury in any action " is retroactive.<sup>11</sup> The fact that a corporation is doing business as administrator and trustee under special legislative enactment does not release it from the prohibition against pleading usury as a defense to a transaction in which it is involved.<sup>12</sup> The statute prohibiting corporations from interposing the defense of usury includes collateral contracts of individuals as sureties, guarantors or indorsers for a corporation.<sup>13</sup> Neither a corporation nor its receiver can by action recover the excess paid upon a usurious transaction by it; because the statute prohibiting a corporation from interposing the defense of usury takes away from the corporation altogether all benefit or advantage resulting from the statute of usury.<sup>14</sup> Neither a corporation-maker nor an individual-indorser of a usurious note can avail itself or himself of the defense of usury.<sup>15</sup> An agreement by a corporation guaranteed by an individual to pay six per cent interest to a given date when the principal is due and seventeen per cent more thereafter on so much as remains unpaid until paid binds the corporation and also the individual within the obligations of his guaranty.<sup>16</sup> Assuming that bills of exchange are a New York contract on which a corporate maker cannot plead usury, then the indorsers thereon, it would seem, are also precluded from pleading usury.<sup>17</sup> A statute prohibiting any corporation from interposing the defense of usury in any action likewise prevents guarantors of a note of a corporation from setting up usury as a defense to an action against them or their guaranty.<sup>18</sup> The effect of a statute permitting any compensation agreed upon in writing to be received for an advance payable on demand and made on certificates of stock, etc., is to remove from the operation of the usury laws all such loans, whether the agreement be oral or written, " though it would seem that a contract in writing is necessary assets equitably among its creditors is merely what the law requires and is not a sufficient consideration to support an agreement by a creditor to "forbear forcing collection" of his claim.<sup>8</sup> As a general rule the assets of a corporation should upon its insolvency be distributed pro rata among all the shareholders; but the rule has no application when there is an express contract between the holders of one class of stock and the corporation that they should not share equally with the other shareholders.<sup>9</sup>

attachment proceedings involving a trading corporation, the affidavit of its president is insufficient to show that he has any personal knowledge of the transactions at issue if it simply shows that he is president: he must set out the sources of his information.<sup>2</sup> Evidence that a domestic corporation is boxing up its stock in hand, correspondence, records, etc., and has rented its office in New York, all with a view to moving its business to another state, may serve to prove it is about to move its property outside the State, but is no proof at all that this is done with a view to defrauding its creditors, and is, therefore, not sufficient for a resident creditor to obtain an attachment against its property.<sup>3</sup>

ration for the benefit of its creditors.<sup>13</sup> The statute forbidding transfer of a corporation's property to its officers, directors or stockholders except for full value after it has refused to pay any of its obligations relates only to corporations which are financially embarrassed or in danger of so becoming.<sup>14</sup> In order that an act by a corporation may come within the prohibition imposed by statute upon it of a transfer by it of property in contemplation of insolvency, "the prohibited act must itself accomplish or at least enter into the actual transfer or assignment of the property."<sup>15</sup> "Now the scheme of this [sixty-sixth] section [of the Stock Corporation Law] is to protect the creditor from the misconduct of the officers, directors and stockholders of a corporation; to insure those who trust either to the solvency of the corporation, to the honor of its officers, or to the liability of stockholders, from being defrauded by the officers, the directors or stockholders of such corporation. There are corporate situations in which the stockholders are liable, within certain limitations, for the debts of the corporation, and there have been instances in the past where stockholders, realizing that the insolvency of the corporation is imminent, and that they are likely to lose not only the amount already invested in the shares, but possibly much more besides, have secured for the shares an apparent purchaser, who, being himself in a state of insolvency, was willing for a very trifling, temporary consideration, to add to his obligations. Transfers of such a character, made for the purpose of relieving the shareholder from his statutory or contractual liability, are aimed at by this provision of the statute . . . there was nothing to prevent the defendant [director] from making absolute disposition of his shares . . . It matters not that he may have been of the opinion that ultimately the corporation would fail and that the effect of the sale of his stock would be to relieve himself from liability as a director. It was his right, if he saw fit, to get rid of the office of director for the purpose of avoiding liability for debts thereafter to be contracted, and he could accomplish that result either by resigning or by an absolute sale and transfer of his stock."<sup>16</sup> The two essentials which vitiate an assignment by an alleged insolvent corporation

“are the insolvency or pending insolvency of the corporation and the intent to create a preference.”<sup>17</sup> The statute prohibiting the giving of a preference to any creditor by an insolvent corporation, its officers, directors or stockholders has this effect: “(1) It prohibits officers and directors of an insolvent corporation, or of one about to become insolvent, from using their knowledge of its condition and their dominant position for their individual benefit in collecting their own claims, either through a voluntary payment or through collusive and preferential liens to the prejudice of other creditors, not so favorably situated. (2) It prohibits a preferential general assignment by a corporation, though it does not forbid assignments without preferences. (3) It prohibits a transfer of any of the corporate assets to an officer, director or stockholder upon any other consideration than the payment of the full value of the property in cash.”<sup>18</sup> The rule of strict construction applicable to highly penal statutes should not be applied to the statute making officers and directors of a corporation personally liable for loss accruing to its stockholders and creditors by reason of a transfer of its property while insolvency is imminent or existing.<sup>19</sup> In considering the effects of the statute making invalid a transfer of corporate property pending insolvency “the rule is that in cases where the creditor innocently receives payment from the principal debtor, which he is afterwards required to repay because it constituted an unlawful preference, the debt will not, therefore, be considered as having been paid so as to release the surety, but the creditor may pursue his remedy against the surety as if no payment had been made.”<sup>20</sup>

§ 405. Id.: Mortgage.—“ The claims of general creditors of a mortgagor are in general postponed to the mortgage, even when their debts were contracted prior to its execution. . . . expenses incurred by receivers in the management and preservation of the property which is the subject of the receivership may, by order of the court, be made a primary charge and displace the priority of lien which, in ordinary cases, attaches to a mortgage security existing at the time of the insolvency. The courts have assumed to go still further, and to adjudge priority of payment of debts contracted by a failing corporation within a few months prior to its adjudged insolvency for labor, supplies and necessary current expenses incurred in the struggle to keep itself alive. There is a sound equity which supports the doctrine that when the nature of the property is such that the business to which it has been devoted cannot be discontinued without great probable loss, the court may authorize it to be continued by its officer and receiver, pending the closing up of the affairs of the insolvent corporation. Expenses incurred by a receiver under such circumstances may be justly said to be expenses of preservation for the benefit of bondholders or other persons entitled to share in the final distribution, which ought to be first paid. . . . ration of its property to its officers or stockholders is founded upon its refusal to pay its debts or upon its existing or pending insolvency and an intent to give a preference; so that a chattel mortgage given by the directors to one loaning the corporation money, under the bona fide belief that the loan will enable the corporation to swim is not void.<sup>10</sup> A preference by a corporation to any particular creditor over other creditors is not to be inferred from its execution three months before a petition against it in bankruptcy is filed of a mortgage for a term of years to a trustee to secure bonds issued to some creditors, unless it is shown that it was given in view of insolvency.<sup>11</sup> An order requiring a temporary receiver of a corporation, appointed on a showing by its directors of insolvency, and empowered to continue the corporate business, to hold the rents and profits of premises in his hands, which the corporation had mortgaged and which had been foreclosed before his appointment, subject to the further direction of the court, does not create a lien prohibited by the statute against preferences by an insolvent corporation.<sup>12</sup> In an action by a judgment creditor of a corporation to require a stockholder to account for personality of the corporation conveyed to him by chattel mortgage on the ground that when mortgaged the personality constituted the sole assets of the corporation and its liabilities exceeded its assets, it must be alleged that the mortgage was given upon inadequate or non-existent consideration or for an antecedent debt due the stockholder, as well as that at the date of the transfer the plaintiff was a creditor of the corporation or held a claim against it.<sup>13</sup> A mortgage given by a corporation does not violate the statutory prohibition against corporate transfers in contemplation of its insolvency when its execution, though while the corporation was concededly insolvent, was but the observance of contractual obligations entered into when there was no question as to its absolute soundness.<sup>14</sup> When, under a contract made with a corporation prior to the appointment of a temporary receiver in proceedings for its dissolution, a mortgage is given by it to a trustee to secure bondholders and the trustee has started foreclosure, the court has no power on appointing the temporary receiver to enjoin the prosecution of the foreclosure proceedings.<sup>15</sup> In order that a mortgage by a corporation violate the statute making "any transfer or assignment in contemplation of the insolvency of such company" void, the fact of insolvency is not conclusive that the mortgage was made in contemplation thereof, but the act must be in anticipation or in view of insolvency.<sup>16</sup>

§ 406. Id.: Judgment.—The statute making void all sales, transfers, mortgages, etc., of a corporation's property in payment for its debts, etc., and all judgments confessed by it, after the filing of a petition for its dissolution "was aimed, not at the disposition of the corporate property made under the order of the court by its receiver, or even by the corporation, but at the voluntary disposition of its property by the insolvent corporation; and the confession of judgment prohibited was one made by the corporation as its voluntary act without the interference of the court, and not a judgment . . . which rests upon no confession, nor even consent, but upon the action and order of the court . . ."<sup>17</sup> The meaning of the statute prohibiting corporate officers from suffering a judgment against the corporation is that "when a corporation is insolvent or its insolvency is imminent, no judgment shall be valid which is suffered by any of its officers, directors or stockholders with the intent of giving a preference to any particular creditor over other creditors. . . . But where a creditor has a just claim to which the corporation has no defense, and he adopts the ordinary process and procedure of the court to enforce it, which results in a judgment by default, it cannot be properly held to be within the condemnation of the statute."<sup>18</sup> The purpose of the statute making void any transfer of a corporation's property in contemplation of its insolvency is to prevent unjust discrimination among creditors of an insolvent company, but "only in one way, to wit.: by restraint upon the action of the corporation and its officers; so that mere silence or omission on their part, such as letting creditors take judgments by default against the corporation on claims to which there are no just defenses, does not offend against the statute, although if discrimination results from affirmative action of the corporation taken for the express purpose of giving certain creditors some advantage in its property the statute might apply."<sup>19</sup> A judgment obtained by a creditor of a corporation against it is not avoided as preferential by "the mere fact that the officers of the corporation do not oppose the creditor in his effort to get the judgment, but remain passive"; though if the corporation suffered the creditor to take the judgment with the intent of giving him a preference, the judgment is void.<sup>20</sup> "Merely permitting a creditor [not a stockholder or officer] to obtain a judgment in the regular course of legal proceedings is not on the part of the officers of the corporation a transfer or assignment of the property of the corporation within the meaning of the statute" prohibiting the assignment of the property of a corporation which has refused to pay its obligations when due or in contemplation of insolvency; nor the fact that the indebtedness was changed from one note for the full amount to several notes for smaller amounts so that judgments might be had thereon in a shorter time in a court which would have no jurisdiction of a single suit for the whole amount of the indebtedness.<sup>1</sup> Whether insolvency be defined as a present inability to pay current obligations as they mature or inadequacy of property to pay debts, a corporation which is unable to meet a note and permits the payee to obtain judgment thereon under such circumstances as to conceal its entry from other creditors is guilty of the statutory wrong of giving a preference to one creditor over another and the judgment will be set aside.<sup>2</sup> The facts of each case must be examined to determine whether a judgment against a corporation is void as having been suffered by an officer, director or stockholder with the intent to prefer a creditor.<sup>3</sup> In determining whether or not judgments against an insolvent corporation are void, as being equivalent to assignments or transfers by it of its property in contemplation of insolvency, the judg-directors and officers personally for losses sustained by its creditors or stockholders by reason of a transfer of its property while insolvency exists or is imminent to its officers, directors or stockholders, is not limited to corporations which have defaulted in the payment of notes or other obligations.<sup>19</sup> Payments and transfers by a stock corporation to a creditor will be set aside as constituting an illegal preference when made while the corporation was indebted to its other creditors in an amount which it was unable to pay and never did pay.<sup>20</sup> That its assets are less than its liabilities does not make a corporation insolvent: the test is its general inability to pay its obligations as they become due, because a going corporation may have an honest expectation, in the exercise of reasonable intelligence, entertained sincerely and in good faith, of going on with its business and paying all its debts; but if it has abandoned its business, this test no longer holds good.<sup>1</sup> Accounts based on written agreements fixing the rate of payment for certain services rendered a corporation are not its "obligations" in the sense in which that word is used in the statute avoiding the transfer of any of its property by a corporation to its officers, and others, which has refused to pay any of its obligations.<sup>2</sup> "A corporation cannot be said to have committed an act of bankruptcy or insolvency, or to have neglected or refused to pay and discharge its obligations, because its demand notes remain outstanding and unpaid, until payment has been demanded."<sup>3</sup> A corporation owing overdue claims of $30,000 on express contract obligations upon which suits to which it had no defense had been brought or were pending, not to mention other matured or maturing obligations on which suits were threatening, and having assets of but a few thousand dollars save for a very heavily mortgaged apartment house is insolvent, in the sense that its "stock, effects and other property . . . are insufficient to pay all just demands for which it is liable or to afford a reasonable security to those who may deal with it", so as to warrant the appointment of a temporary receiver in a proceeding for its voluntary dissolution; and the entry nunc pro for two cases, first, where the corporation has refused payment of its notes, or other evidence of debt, and is in default, it prohibits any subsequent assignment or transfer by the corporation or any of its officers, directly or indirectly, of any of its property, to any officer or stockholder, in payment of a debt, and, second, it prohibits any transfer or assignment whatever on any consideration, to an officer, stockholder or other person in contemplation of insolvency."<sup>10</sup> Both an assignment by a corporation or its officers to its stockholders or officers after it has refused to pay its debts and an assignment to anyone in contemplation of its insolvency are void.<sup>11</sup> "To a stockholder or director a transfer of corporate property is forbidden, if the corporation shall have refused to pay any of its notes or obligations when due, but to other creditors a transfer of corporate property in payment of its debts is only prohibited, 'when the corporation is insolvent or its insolvency is imminent, with the intent of giving a preference to any particular creditor over other creditors of the corporation.'"<sup>12</sup> ". . . the true construction of the statute [making it illegal for a corporation which has refused payment of any evidence of its debt to transfer its property to its officers, etc., or to anyone in contemplation of insolvency] prohibits the acquisition by a director of an insolvent corporation, who is also a creditor, through the process of attachment, of a preferential lien on the corporate assets."<sup>13</sup> An assignment by a corporation to its directors for the benefit of creditors without preference is not invalid

under the statute prohibiting a transfer by a corporation of its property to its directors, and others, if it has refused to pay any of its obligations.<sup>14</sup> An assignment by a corporation for the benefit of creditors is not void under the statute prohibiting preferences to a corporation's officers by itself when insolvent if the assignee was neither a director nor stockholder at the time of the assignment.<sup>15</sup> The statute prohibiting a corporation which has refused payment of its evidences of debt from transferring its property to any of its officers or stockholders is intended to protect general corporate creditors and to prevent officers and stockholders who happen also to be corporate creditors from securing a preference to themselves; and a stockholder cannot be shielded from the penalty of the statute because he happens to be a member of a co-partnership to which the corporation is indebted.<sup>16</sup> The legislature intends that a trustee of a insolvent corporation's property on its being wound up shall be selected by the court; so that an assignment by it of all its property for the benefit of creditors in contemplation of insolvency to an individual selected by its directors is void.<sup>17</sup> " . . . . When the corporation becomes insolvent, or when it is known or apparent to the directors that it is unable to continue business, so that suspension is imminent or inevitable, the assets become a trust fund for equal distribution among the creditors, and the directors must hold the assets for that purpose and have no right to appropriate the same in payment of their individual claims"; so that a trustee in bankruptcy of the corporation may in equity cancel an agreement whereby it gave moneys to its president and direct and compel him to account therefor.<sup>18</sup>

“The law permits no such anomaly as one corporation organized by another corporation, which furnishes all its capital, takes all its shares of stock and holds them for sale.”<sup>10</sup> Assuming that a guaranty by one corporation of payment of the bonds of another is ultra vires, yet the guaranty may nevertheless be enforced by one taking the bonds as a quid pro quo of his claim against the guarantor company.<sup>11</sup> A corporation is not liable upon notes given by another corporation prior to the incorporation of the former unless it received some benefit from the goods for which the notes were given or some other consideration than such goods given for the notes.<sup>12</sup> A contract between a corporation controlled by certain individuals and another corporation formed and owned by them is presumptively fraudulent, particularly if they fraudulently conspired to accomplish the contract; and, if the contract was a mere scheme to avoid the issue of stock for money or property, it is void.<sup>13</sup> “The rule is well settled that an injunction will not be granted or sustained against a private corporation in a suit brought by an individual in the interest of a rival private corporation.”<sup>14</sup> During the continuance of the World War any corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York may co-operate with other corporations and with natural persons in the creation and maintenance of instrumentalities conducive to the winning of the war.<sup>14a</sup> statute permitting it to become such stockholder, its president or other officers are eligible to the office of director of such other corporation the same as if they were individually stockholders therein.<sup>15</sup> "It is undoubtedly a well-settled rule of law that executory contracts entered into by corporations having common directors are voidable at the instance of either corporation, and the court will not inquire into the question whether or not it is beneficial to the corporation seeking to avoid it. This right is vested in the corporation and not in the individual stockholder. A stockholder cannot enjoin the execution of a contract intra vires unless fraud is shown."<sup>16</sup> When an agreement is executed by two corporations having nearly identical directorates, the second controlling the first and having a large pecuniary interest in the non-performance of the agreement by the first, as well as in expenditure of moneys under the agreement, the law will invalidate the agreement at the instance of the first corporation even though there be no suggestion of actual fraud.<sup>17</sup> A corporation controlled by the same board of directors which controls it and the corporation holding its stock cannot be estopped from complaining of an agreement ratified by action of such board as stockholders, when, acting as directors, such board could not have bound the first corporation to the agreement.<sup>18</sup> A small stockholder and bondholder in a corporation may himself in his own name and without prior demand of the corporation call it to account in equity, as well as individual defendants owning a large majority of the stock, who practically are its sole directors and managers, if it is alleged that they as officers and trustees took from themselves as officers and trustees of another corporation a lease of the latter to the defendant corporation at an exorbitant rent, to deplete the corporate funds and injure the plaintiff; and if it averred that they have taken from the defendant corporation's funds large sums on account of loans alleged to have been made by them as individuals to the defendant corporation.<sup>19</sup> hundred and thirty-third section of this book. Any domestic or foreign stock corporation (except a moneyed corporation) may purchase, acquire, hold and dispose of the stock, bonds and other evidences of indebtedness of any domestic or foreign corporation and issue in exchange therefor its stock, bonds or other obligations, (1) if authorized to do so by a provision in any certificate of incorporation of such stock corporation or in any certificate amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto filed in pursuance of law; or (2) if the corporation, the stock of which is so purchased, acquired, held or disposed of is (a) engaged in a business similar to that of such stock corporation, or (b) engaged in the manufacture, use or sale of the property or in the construction or operation of works necessary or useful in the business of such stock corporation or in which or in connection with which the manufactured articles, product or property of such stock corporation are or may be used, or (c) a corporation with which such stock corporation is or may be authorized to consolidate.<sup>20</sup> When any such corporation is a stockholder in any other corporation as just stated, its president or other officers are eligible to the office of director of such corporation the same as if they were individually stockholders therein; and the corporation holding such stock possesses and exercises in respect thereof all the rights, powers and privileges of individual owners or holders of such stock.<sup>1</sup>

§ 416. One corporation cannot disaffirm a transaction by which it acquires the stock of another corporation in an unauthorized and unlawful manner, or recover the money it paid therefor, without either returning or offering to return the stock; and a receiver of a corporation is under the same obligation in this regard as is the corporation itself.<sup>11</sup> A stockholder of a holding corporation, formed by agreement of stockholders of several constituent companies and others who became the sole stockholders of the holding company, has no cause of action against those who became stockholders in the holding company for the recovery of alleged secret profits retained by them in transactions toward the organization of the holding company, when no one else interested in the holding or constituent companies disputes the validity of its organization and the gravamen of the action is fraud of the rights of the stockholders of such companies, as even if there be overcapitalization it will not avail plaintiff because the rights of the public are not involved.<sup>12</sup>

§ 5. "Whenever it shall appear to the court before which any proceeding under section four of this act may be pending, that the ends of justice require that other parties should be brought before the court, the court may cause them to be summoned, whether they reside in the district in which the court is held or not; and subpoenas to that end may be served in any district by the marshal thereof." Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647; 26 Stat. L. 209.

§ 6. "Any property owned under any contract or by any combination, or pursuant to any conspiracy (and being the subject thereof) mentioned in section one of this act, and being in the course of transportation from one State to another, or to a foreign country, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the forfeiture, seizure, and condemnation of property imported into the United States contrary to law." Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647; 26 Stat. L. 209.

§ 7. "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this act, may sue therefor in any circuit court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover three fold the damages by him sustained, and the costs of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647; 26 Stat. L. 209.

§ 8. "That the word 'person,' or 'persons,' wherever used in this act shall be deemed to include corporations and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of either the United States, the laws of any of the Territories, the laws of any State, or the laws of any foreign country." Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647; 26 Stat. L. 209.

§ 73. "That every combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is hereby declared to be contrary to public policy, illegal, and void when the same is made by or between two or more persons or corporations either of whom, as agent or principal, is engaged in importing any article from any foreign country into the United States, and when such combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is intended to operate in restraint of lawful trade, or free competition in lawful trade or commerce, or to increase the market price in any part of the United States of any article or articles imported or intended to be imported into the United States, or of any manufacture into which such imported article enters or is intended to enter. Every person who is or hereafter shall be engaged in the importation of goods or of any commodity from any foreign country in violation of this section of this Act, or who shall combine or conspire with another to violate the same, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof in any court of the United States such person shall be fined in a sum not less than one hundred dollars and not exceeding five thousand dollars, and shall be further punished by imprisonment, in the discretion of the court, for a term not less than three months nor exceeding twelve months." Act of Feb. 12, 1913, c. 40, 402; 37 Stat. L. 667.

§ 74. "That the several circuit courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of section seventy-three of this Act; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney-General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. Such proceedings may be by way of petitions setting forth the case and praying that such violations shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited. Where the parties complained of shall have been duly notified of such petition the court shall proceed, as soon as may be, to the hearing and determination of the case; and pending such petition and before final decree, the court may at any time make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises." Act of Aug. 27, 1894, c. 349; 28 Stat. L. § 70.

§ 75. "That whenever it shall appear to the court before which any proceeding under the seventy-fourth section of this act may be pending that the ends of justice require that other parties should be brought before the court, the court may cause them to be summoned, whether they reside in the district in which the court is held or not; and subpoenas to that end may be served in any district by the marshal thereof." Act of Aug. 27, 1894, c. 349; 28 Stat. L. 570.

§ 76. "That any property owned under any contract or by any combination, or pursuant to any conspiracy, and being the subject thereof, mentioned in section seventy-three of this Act, imported into and being within the United States or being in the course of transportation from one State to another, or to or from a Territory or the District of Columbia, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the forfeiture, seizure and condemnation of property imported into the United States contrary to law." Act of Feb. 12, 1913, c. 40; 37 Stat. L. 667.

§ 77. "That any person who shall be injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this Act may sue therefor in any circuit court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the costs of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." Act of Aug. 27, 1894, c. 349; 28 Stat. L. 570.

§ 418. Id.: In General.—The Anti-Monopoly Law is but a codification of the common law and does not limit the statutory right of corporations to acquire stock of other corporations even to the last share and the resultant merger.<sup>17</sup> “The Anti-Monopoly Act is really aimed at combinations between independent concerns for the purpose of regulating prices and production, and what is abhorrent and repugnant to the statute are contracts, agreements, arrangements or combinations which tend toward a control of the sale or production of a thing of common use, and so prevent competition in supply or price.”<sup>18</sup> A covenant in partial and reasonable restraint of trade is in the nature of a property right and assignable, at least in connection with a sale of the property and business of the assignor.<sup>19</sup> The courts are not prevented from giving equitable relief by injunction against breach of a contract in restraint of trade because a bond, with a stipulation for liquidated damages, was executed in connection with the covenant.<sup>20</sup> A vendor corporation delivering goods under an agreement illegal for the reason that it is against public policy cannot recover for the price.<sup>1</sup> An injunction will not lie to prevent stockholders of one corporation from selling their holdings to another corporation on the mere assumption that the latter corporation seeks to obtain control of the former one for purposes inimical to the former’s minority stockholders.<sup>2</sup>

§ 419. Id.: What Is Trade or Commerce.—The production of opera is not trade or commerce so as to make a contract by one corporation with another in that business not to produce it in a couple of cities for a decade void under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, even though incidentally some acts or transactions of inter-state nature are involved.<sup>3</sup>

or competing in the same business.”<sup>4</sup> “If the business of a private individual or corporation is threatened with competition it is not illegal or immoral if one can persuade his competitor to abandon an enterprise in which both cannot succeed, and take employment with the one remaining in the business at a stated compensation.”<sup>5</sup> A covenant supported by a good consideration and constituting a partial and not a general restraint of trade, which is reasonable in view of the circumstances disclosed, is valid.<sup>6</sup> “Briefly, contracts in restraint of trade are void if they are so unreasonable as unduly to interfere with the rights of the public. The test is not whether the corporation has the right of eminent domain, or whether its property is impressed with a semi-public use, but whether or not such rights are unduly affected.”<sup>7</sup> When a combination of corporations is accomplished through the acquisition of many by one without intent to restrain commerce but only to more conveniently operate, the combination is not illegal if the acquiring corporation previously controlled the acquired corporations in another way.<sup>8</sup> A contract by one corporation to purchase stock of others to prevent competition is not of itself necessarily illegal unless it result in limiting the supply and enhancing the cost of the commodity dealt in by the corporations; and in a commodity such as gas this danger is not present because the Legislature can control its price.<sup>9</sup> A corporation having a by-law permitting its board of directors to fix the market price of the commodity in which it deals at which it shall be purchased by its stockholders, and largely controlling the market in that commodity in and about New York City, which fixes the price of the commodity accordingly, is guilty of a combination inimical to trade and commerce, and, therefore, unlawful, and may be annulled at suit of the attorney-general.<sup>10</sup>

A by-law by an association of newspaper owners providing that the associates should not take news from any other association is not in restraint of trade or restriction of the liberty of the press.<sup>11</sup> Telegraph companies each reaching some points not reached by any of the others, though not owning precisely parallel lines or lines running exactly between the same places, may lawfully combine under the law.<sup>12</sup> A corporation dealing in a public commodity such as coal, has the right to use all legitimate efforts to obtain the best price for the article in which it deals; but when it endeavors artificially to enhance prices by suppressing or keeping out of market the products of others, and to accomplish that purpose by means of contracts binding them to withhold their supply, the combination is illegal as against public policy.<sup>13</sup> Joint purchase of equipment for affiliated railroads operating lines is not violative of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act or the New York Stock Corporation Law.<sup>14</sup> "A telephone corporation may, where such a course is not expressly or impliedly prohibited by its charter, where its charter permits it to do practically any business anywhere at any time, agree to limit a part of its activities within a certain district."<sup>15</sup> A corporation's act by which it buys the worthless notes of a competitor to embarrass the latter's business and injure his credit by a law suit and pays a bonus to induce his printers to refuse to do his printing is ultra vires.<sup>16</sup>

§ 421. Id.: Internal Management.—The interference of a court between minority and majority stockholders in their squabbles as to the internal management of their corporation has already been discussed.<sup>17</sup> Every corporation has power to make by-laws not inconsistent with any existing law for the management of its property and the regulation of its affairs.<sup>18</sup> ". . . in the absence of fraud or bad faith courts have nothing to do with the internal management of business corporations, provided they keep within their corporate sumed to be valid.”<sup>6</sup> “The presumption is that all contracts made by corporations are within their power, unless the contrary appears on the face of the contract, or unless it is shown affirmatively, by way of defense, that the corporation had no power to make the contract.”<sup>7</sup> “A corporation may become bound by a contract, express or implied, under the same circumstances as an individual. To make a corporation liable, it is not necessary to show an express resolution passed at a meeting of its directors. Where a party does work or furnishes materials to a corporation under a contract with one assuming to act as its agent, to the knowledge of its officers, without dissent on the part of the corporation, it will be held to have ratified the contract, and to be liable thereunder.”<sup>8</sup> A court is not called upon to declare a corporate contract ineffectual for illegality if its validity is recognized by the corporation which has accepted the performance of it by the other party to it, unless it be inherently illegal or contrary to public policy.<sup>9</sup> The general rule is that corporations have such powers only as are specifically granted by the act of incorporation and as are necessary to carry into effect the powers expressly granted, and it is true that a corporate contract malum in se is void and that a corporation cannot bind itself by a contract expressly prohibited by statute or its charter, however lawful the contract might be but for the prohibition; but a contract of lease entered into by a corporation as lessee, terminated as to the future and unperformed solely as to payment of rent, may be enforced against the corporation by the lessor, as it is not in the true sense of the word illegal.<sup>10</sup> An agreement by a corporation to buy back from its employee stock of it which he has bought upon his leaving its employ is not necessarily void as contravening public policy.<sup>11</sup> “It is settled law that a corporation has no power, by contract or indorsement, to become a surety or guarantor for any other person except in the course of the authorized business of a guarantor or indorser.”<sup>12</sup> Where a corporation has made a contract many years ago, within its power to make and as it would have been had a statute then existing and authorizing it been observed, it will be assumed that the circumstances essential to a due execution of the power existed.<sup>13</sup> The signature "Louis Rosenberg, Inc." by a corporation "L. Rosenberg, Incorporated" if made with intent to bind the corporation will do so.<sup>14</sup> An assignment by a corporation to an individual to be signed, according to resolution by it, by two of its officers is valid though dated and signed by one of them before the adoption of such resolution.<sup>15</sup> A company-lessee agreeing to pay all taxes on a corporation-lessor's property and business except the "present income tax" on the rent (paid direct to the lessor's stockholders as dividends on their stock-holdings), referred to in the lease as "interest and dividends", or any tax imposed or to be imposed thereon, is not bound to pay an income tax subsequently imposed after a lapse of time from the repeal of such "present income tax."<sup>16</sup> An agreement approved by stockholders with an attorney who has extricated their company from difficulties by exercising dictatorial powers to pay him a percentage of net earnings applicable to dividends, later paid by the directors, is good.<sup>17</sup> In order to set aside an intra vires corporate contract it is not sufficient that some stockholders believe it unwise, but fraudulently oppressive conduct at least must be shown.<sup>18</sup> The law of that state in which a contract of employment and an accident injuring the employee happened governs the liability of the corporate employer.<sup>19</sup> To make out a case of assumpsit against a corporation the plaintiff must prove that the defendant either contracted as a corporation or was incorporated and incurred the indebtedness so as to raise an implied

note given by a corporation chartered to raise and smelt lead ore, which has only raised it, for the purpose of buying the equipment to smelt it, too, is within the powers of its officers to give.<sup>8</sup> Merely writing a corporation's name on the back of a negotiable instrument payable to it is not an endorsement by it, as it can act only through its officer or agent and must assume so to do in endorsing the instrument.<sup>9</sup> To create a liability in a corporation for a draft it is not necessary that the corporate name should be used thereon, but it is enough that it be drawn or accepted under a name adopted by it by a party authorized for that purpose by the company by writing, by resolution of its board of directors or by conduct of its officers.<sup>10</sup> A corporate note with its seal is still negotiable and not a specialty until shown that the parties intended the seal to make it a specialty and non-negotiable.<sup>11</sup> A note and chattel mortgage given in the name of a corporation to pay for practically all its stock bought by an individual are not merely ultra vires but void, even in the hands of an innocent holder.<sup>12</sup> A counterclaim by the maker of notes to a firm is available against a corporation which is a mere successor to the rights of the firm, as distinguished from a holder of the paper for value before maturity.<sup>13</sup>

“ . . . when a corporation opens an account with a banking institution it confers upon that institution the power to determine whether any check drawn upon the account conforms to the contract between the depositor and the depository. When it makes a mistake in the determination of such a question the depository may be liable to the depositor; but the depositor cannot recover back the money paid on such check to a third person who has received it in good faith, relying on the representation of the deposit bank that the check was all right and has subsequently parted with the money.”<sup>14</sup> If one taking a corporation’s note assumes the legality of its negotiation, he is protected, even though he made no inquiry, if, on the question of its authorization coming up, it develops that there was authority.<sup>15</sup> One dealing, by taking its notes, with a railroad company which has a right to, and ordinarily does, pay its president a salary need not, in order to ascertain if the salary is legally payable, go beyond an assertion by its directors in a resolution that the corporation was indebted to the president for salary, and authorizing the issue of notes to pay it.<sup>16</sup> A corporation at the request of the president of which and for the alleged benefit of which a note on which it was the last indorser is discounted is liable on its endorsement in the absence of knowledge by the discounteer that the proceeds were to be used otherwise than for the corporation’s benefit.<sup>17</sup>

§ 424. <sup>14</sup> A corporation need file no annual report when no acts other than formal ones were performed by it in furtherance of the objects of its organization and "it never got into business;" so that its trustees cannot be held liable for its debts for failure to file such a report. Kirkland v. Kille, 99 N. Y. 390, 2 N. E. 36 (1885); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. "When the condition of the company is such that the end and object for which it was formed are destroyed and there is neither an ability or intention on its part at any time to further prosecute its business, it is no longer required to make the report mentioned in section 12 of the Manufacturing Act." First Nat. Bank of Jersey City v. Lamont, 130 N. Y. 366, 29 N. E. 321 (1891); Gen. Mfg. Act, § 12 (L. 1848, c. 40). The statute requiring the filing annually by corporations of a capital stock report, being penal in its nature, must not be enlarged by construction; so long as the report be in form a complete compliance with the statute it need not specify how much of the stock was paid for in cash and how much in property; and its failure so to do will not subject the trustees to liability for its debts. Whitaker v. Masterton, 106 N. Y. 277, 12 N. E. 604 (1887); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12, L. 1853, c. 333, § 2. The statutory requirement that every manufacturing corporation file a report of the amount of its capital stock paid in "within twenty days from the first day of January" does not mean "that the section may be complied with by making a report within twenty days before or after the first day of January;" but only after. Cincinnati Cooperage Co. v.

The requirement of statute that stock issued for property shall not be stated in a corporation's annual report as being issued for cash but according to the fact is directory only, subjecting one disobeying it to no penalty; and no penalty elsewhere prescribed can be made applicable on its violation. Bonnell v. Griswold, 80 N. Y. 128 (1880); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1853, c. 333, § 2. A corporate annual report which states the capital stock of the company and "that it has been paid up in full" is the same as if it said that the capital has been paid in, and satisfies the statute. Bonnell v. Griswold, 80 N. Y. 128 (1880); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. A statute requiring a stock corporation annually to make a capital stock report "verified by the oath of the president or vice-president and treasurer or secretary" calls for verification by either the president or vice-president with either the treasurer or secretary. *Manhattan Co. v. 1892, c. 2, § 30. The duty imposed by statute upon manufacturing corporations to make a report is a corporate duty to be discharged by making a report signed by the president and a majority of the trustees. Cornell v. Roach, 101 N. Y. 373, 5 N. E. 52 (1886); Gen. Mfg. Act, L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. An annual report of a corporation verified solely by its president as such is sufficient if prior to the time when it was made the person who was treasurer and secretary had resigned, though his resignation was not formally accepted till after that date; and if, further, the president since such other's resignation had exercised the duties of secretary and treasurer pursuant to the by-laws. Noble v. Euler, 20 A. D. 548, 47 N. Y. Supp. 302 (1897); St. Corp. L. § 30 (L. 1892, c. 688). When by statute a corporate report must be made and verified in duplicate and filed both with the Secretary of State and the County Clerk, the fact that one of the duplicates filed with one of such officials is verified while the other is not does not make the verification insufficient. Manhattan Co. v. Kaldenberg, 165 N. Y. 1, 58 N. E. 790 (1900); L. 1892, c. 2, § 30. If no newspaper is published in the place named in a corporation's certificate of incorporation as that where its operations are to be carried on, and it has, therefore, to publish its annual report, according to the statute "in some newspaper published nearest the place where the business of the company was carried on," it is not essential that it be published in a newspaper of the village in that town if a village in another town is equally near, as a publication in a paper in the latter village is sufficient. Cameron v. Seaman, 69 N. Y. 396 (1877); L. 1848, c. 40,

§ 12. (The company's mines and operations were in the village of East Fishkill. No newspaper was there published, but one was published in the village of Fishkill, in the town of Fishkill, adjoining the village of East Fishkill, and another in Poughkeepsie, to which one part of East Fishkill was nearer than to Fishkill village. A publication in the newspaper either in Poughkeepsie or Fishkill village is sufficient.) The continuance of the default to file a corporate report in successive years does not have the effect of renewing the liability of the corporation's trustees for its debts so as to make them liable for a period longer than three years after the first default happened. Losee v. Bullard, 79 N. Y. 404 (1880); L. 1848, c. 40, § 12. "When, in an action to recover a statutory penalty for failure to file a report and for filing a false report, the plaintiff dies after judgment and during the pendency of the appeal, and judgment is affirmed without knowledge of plaintiff's death, substitution, on motion, of plaintiff's personal representative will be made on the ground that the cause of action after judgment is merged in the judgment, which itself may be assigned, and passes as assets to the representatives of a deceased party." Blake v. Griswold, 104 N. Y. 613, 11 N. E. 137 (1887). An annual report which states that its assets do not exceed a certain sum is not equivalent to a statement that the assets at least amount to such a sum, and directors filing it are equally as liable as if they had not filed any report. *Lilienthal v. servant the duty of furnishing him a safe and proper place to prosecute his work.<sup>8</sup>

§ 436. Id.: For Contracts By.—The power of directors, officers and agents of a corporation to bind it by contracts has been previously discussed.<sup>9</sup> In general, a corporation is bound by a contract made by its agent if it appears either from the contract itself or the contract coupled with the conduct of the parties thereto that credit was given not to the agent but to the corporation.<sup>10</sup> “Corporations can act only through their officers and agents; and if a person has been entrusted by the officers to carry on the business, the acts of that person must be deemed to be binding upon the corporation in all cases where the parties dealing with him have not notice or knowledge of his want of actual authority.”<sup>11</sup> Corporations are bound not only by their contracts under their common seal, but by their simple contracts and those resulting from other acts of their officers and agents performed in the discharge of their ordinary duties — the essential point is not the form of the contract but that it should appear that the corporation and not its agent or officer is the contracting party and got the credit.<sup>12</sup> “. . . When officers or other agents contract for a corporation, and have full authority to do so, and the work to be done, or the property purchased, is for the exclusive benefit of the corporation, and that is known at the time of the making of the contract, the agent is not bound personally, unless he binds himself by some particular, personal contract, or fails to make a contract binding upon his principal.”<sup>13</sup> That a check for stock of a corporation made out to its order was deposited to its credit and that it transferred such stock with knowledge of a guaranty thereof by an individual are sufficient facts to justify a holding that the individual guaranteeing the stock and who sold it was acting for the corporation so as to make it liable on the guaranty.<sup>14</sup> An individual cannot hold a corporation liable for breach of an alleged contract that he should be employed by another corporation to be formed, partly through his efforts, if the ground of his claim is simply the promise by the former corporation's president that he should be so employed in the event that such corporation should take up through the corporation to be formed the business contemplated for it, and it did not do so, although some of its stockholders did go into a new corporation organized to do such business, with which, however, the individual in question had nothing to do.<sup>15</sup> A corporation is bound by an agreement made by its claim agent with one injured through its negligence to employ him for life in consideration of his releasing it from liability if the evidence justifies the inference the corporation's officers knew of the agreement and did not repudiate it.<sup>16</sup> In the absence of proof to show what the duties are of one who is "general manager" of a corporation for manufacturing and selling alcohol, a contract signed by him as such imports simply that he is a general executive officer for all the ordinary business of the corporation and does not bind the corporation to the purchase of an automobile.<sup>17</sup> A traveling salesman of a corporation has no authority to make an agreement for the giving of commissions binding on it.<sup>18</sup> The question whether a contract, signed in the name of an individual followed by the words "Mgr." of a corporation, which does not in terms purport to be that of the corporation but refers to its subject matter as "our advertisement" and states "we will pay" the price named, is that of the corporation or not is ordinarily for the jury to determine.<sup>19</sup>

§ 440. Id.: Averment and Proof of Corporate Existence.—The subject of proof of corporate existence is considered generally in the four hundred and fifty-second section of this book. In an action brought by a corporation the complaint must aver that the plaintiff is a corporation; must state whether it is a domestic or foreign corporation; but the plaintiff need not set forth or specially refer to any act or proceeding by or under which the corporation was created.<sup>7</sup> In an action brought against a domestic corporation the complaint must aver that it is such but need not set forth or specially refer to any act or proceeding by or under which it was created.<sup>8</sup> In an action brought by or against a corporation the plaintiff need not prove upon the trial the existence of the corporation unless the answer is verified and contains an affirmative allegation that the plaintiff or the defendant, as the case may be, is not a corporation.<sup>9</sup> In an action or special proceeding brought by or against a corporation the defendant is deemed to have waived any mistake in the statement of the corporate name unless the misnomer is pleaded in the answer or other pleading in the defendant's behalf.<sup>10</sup> The certificate of incorporation of any corporation duly filed is presumptive evidence of its incorporation, and any amended certificate

Since the statute the plea of nul tiel corporation in an action by a corporation is good; but not in one against a corporation.<sup>11</sup> No plaintiff or defendant corporation in an action can deny its corporate existence at the time of the commencement of the action unless it sets up the fact affirmatively in a verified pleading.<sup>12</sup>

“ . . . the bringing of an action, in a name purporting to be a corporate name, is a sufficient averment of the existence of the plaintiff as a corporation.”<sup>13</sup> A plaintiff need not establish its corporate existence if there be no affirmative allegation that it is not a corporation.<sup>14</sup> “ . . . a corpo-

domestic corporation is not so controverted by an answer alleging the defendant has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to such allegation as to require proof on the trial: the defendant should affirmatively allege the plaintiff is not a corporation to put the corporate existence in issue.<sup>3</sup> An answer alleging that the defendant has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to whether plaintiff is a corporation or not created under the laws referred to in the complaint which alleges that plaintiff is a corporation created under a designated act of the legislature is "not sufficient to put plaintiff upon proof of its corporate existence. The language used certainly has no greater force than a general denial of the whole complaint could have. It is not tantamount to an affirmative allegation that the plaintiff is not a corporation."<sup>4</sup> A mere denial in an answer to a complaint by a corporation properly averring the plaintiff's corporate character is not sufficient to raise an issue of the corporate character; but the answer must contain an affirmative allegation to the effect that the plaintiff is not a corporation.<sup>5</sup> The court should grant a motion by a plaintiff to amend its complaint so as to show the plaintiff to be a corporation rather than an association organized pursuant to statute.<sup>6</sup> Contracts put in evidence in an action by a corporation against an individual made between the two which necessarily assumed the corporation's corporate character operate as against the individual to prove that the plaintiff is a corporation as stated in the contracts.<sup>7</sup>

If a complaint contain no distinct averment that the defendant is a corporation, it cannot be demurred to on the ground that it does not comply with the code requirements of what must be averred in a complaint in an action against a corporation.<sup>8</sup> Lack of denial by a defendant that it is a corporation alleged relieves the plaintiff from the duty of proving defendant's incorporation.<sup>9</sup> A defendant's incorporation need not be proven if the answer does not put it in issue.<sup>10</sup> All that need be alleged in a declaration or reply in an action against a corporation is the general fact of incorporation: how it took place is matter of evidence.<sup>11</sup> The first step in a trial in which the corporate existence of the defendant is an issue is to prove it.<sup>12</sup> To prove the existence of a corporation de facto both the existence of a charter and a use of rights claimed to be conferred thereby or by law must be shown.<sup>13</sup>

§ 441. Id.: Verification of Pleadings.—The verification of corporate pleadings by the corporation's directors, officers and agents is discussed in the two hundred and eighty-seventh, three hundred and thirty-fourth and three hundred and sixty-eighth sections, respectively, of this book. The verification to a pleading by a party which is a domestic corporation must be made by an officer thereof, except that the corporation's agent or attorney may verify if none such officer is within the county where the corporate party's attorney resides, or if he be a nonresident of New York State the county where he has his office, and capable of making the affidavit, or there are two or more parties united in interest and pleading together and neither of them acquainted with the facts is within that county and capable of making the affidavit, or the action or defence is founded upon a written instrument for the payment of money only which is in the possession of the agent or attorney, or all the material allegations are within the personal knowledge of the agent or attorney.<sup>14</sup> A director of a corporation may legally verify a pleading by it in an action to which it is a party.<sup>15</sup> "Section 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the verification of a pleading 'must' be made by a 'party', 'except' (only what is applicable being here cited) that where the 'party' is a domestic corporation it 'must' be made by an officer thereof, and that where a foreign corporation is, 'may' be made by 'the agent of or the attorney for the party.' This terminology shows that an 'officer' of a corporation party is not to be deemed a 'party.' If otherwise, this distinction between a corporation 'party' and its 'officer' would be a contradiction of terms. An officer of a foreign corporation is an agent thereof in law, and within the meaning of the code provision. The secretary of this corporation can therefore verify this answer; but to do so he must comply with section an action in a court of a justice of the peace is a corporation doing business in another county than that in which it resides the summons may be personally served upon it by delivering a copy thereof to an officer, managing agent or person to whom a copy of the summons in an action brought against the corporation in the Supreme Court might be delivered as prescribed in the statute, or to any director, managing agent or trustee of the corporation by whatever official title he or it is called.<sup>5</sup>

“Corporations are intangible, incorporeal existences, and service of process upon them can only be made by service upon some one of their agents or officers. The legislature has power to determine how and upon whom service shall be made . . . . The object of all service of process is said to be to give notice to the party on whom service is made, that he may be aware of and resist what is sought of him, and it is a general rule that any service must be deemed sufficient which renders it reasonably probable that the party proceeded against will be apprised of what is going on against him, and have an opportunity to defend. . . . But where a service is authorized by the legislature which is not according to common experience reasonably calculated, according to the circumstances of the case, to reach the party intended to be affected, and to give him an opportunity to defend, it may be challenged as a violation of the constitutional provision, that no person shall be deprived of his personal rights or property without due process of law . . . .”<sup>6</sup> “A service on a director of a corporation is regular.”<sup>7</sup> A corporation is not bound by process served on one who had been its director but had presented or filed his resignation prior to being served.<sup>8</sup> Service of process on one after he has sold and transferred his stock and the election of someone in his place as director does not bind the corporation.<sup>9</sup> A director who has resigned as such before being served with process against it cannot be used as a means of service upon the corporation although his resignation has not been formally accepted and his resignation reduced the number of directors to less than the statutory minimum of three.<sup>10</sup>

§ 444. Id.: Cessation and Revivor.—An action for personal injuries against a corporation dies upon its dissolution and does not survive as against its receiver, unless, perhaps, it was incorporated under the Business Corporations Law.<sup>11</sup> One claiming stock in a corporation as a result of an agreement of a predecessor partnership to the corporation may not revive a long discontinued action against the corporation against a receiver thereof, when the indebtedness of the corporation is such that its stock is worthless.<sup>12</sup>

§ 445. Id.: Actions on Notes.—A civil cause of action against a corporation founded upon a note or other evidence of debt for the absolute payment of money is entitled to a trial preference.<sup>13</sup> In an action against a domestic corporation to recover damages for the non-payment of a promissory note or other evidence of debt for the absolute payment of money upon demand or at a particular time, an order extending the time to answer or demur cannot be granted except by the court upon notice to the plaintiff's attorney; and the plaintiff may take judgment as in case of default in pleading at the expiration of twenty days after service of a copy of the complaint either personally with the summons or upon the defendant's attorney pursuant to his demand therefor, or if the service of the summons was otherwise than personal, at the expiration of twenty days after the service is complete; unless the defendant serves with a copy of his answer or demurrer a copy of an order of a judge directing that the issues presented by the pleadings be tried.<sup>14</sup>

If a corporation sued on its note does not serve with its answer a copy of an order directing the issues to be tried the plaintiff is entitled to take judgment as upon a default, without returning the answer or taking any other step.<sup>15</sup> The statute requiring a corporation sued on its note to serve an order directing trial of the issues with its answer in order to avoid judgment against itself as in default applies only to a case in which the note itself is defended and not when the note is admitted but a counterclaim is set up: when this is the case

no proper issue can be said to be joined until the plaintiff replies.<sup>16</sup> The statutory permission to a plaintiff in an action against a corporation on its evidence of debt to take judgment by default, unless it serve with its answer or demurrer a judge's order directing trial of the issues, does not apply to an answer so served in a suit against a corporation as indorser.<sup>17</sup> The statutory provision that judgment may be taken by default against a corporation in an action on its note or other evidence of debt unless it serves with its answer or demurrer a copy of an order directing trial of the issue is constitutional and applies to a municipal corporation.<sup>18</sup> The statute permitting judgment by default in an action against a corporation on its note or other evidence of debt unless with its answer or demurrer it serve a copy of a judge's order directing trial of the issues applies to an action in the Municipal Court of New York City.<sup>19</sup> It is not necessary that a domestic corporation sued in a justice's court should file with its verified answer to the summons and verified complaint an order of a judge directing that the issues presented by the pleadings be tried as required by statute.<sup>20</sup> The statutory provision giving priority on the trial calendar to "an action against a corporation, founded upon a note or other evidence of debt for the absolute payment of money" does not apply to an action against a corporation based on an agreement by it with another corporation primarily liable upon a note to be liable for payment thereof.<sup>1</sup> An allegation in a complaint that drafts were accepted by a defendant corporation by its treasurer includes an averment of authority to the treasurer to so accept, as the company could not accept by him unless he had such authority.<sup>2</sup> If a complaint allege that a note was endorsed by a corporate defendant, it implies that it was lawfully endorsed and throws the burden on it of showing it was not lawfully done.<sup>3</sup> A complaint setting out a note and averring that the defendant corporation duly endorsed it to the plaintiff by writing that it should be paid to plaintiff, adding simply the name of the defendant company, is sufficient, as the addition of the name of the agent of the corporation by whom the indorsement was written is unnecessary, though on the trial the plaintiff would be bound to prove that the corporate name was endorsed by someone authorized to sign the corporate name.<sup>4</sup>

§ 446. Id.: Costs and Security for Costs.—When an action is brought by the Attorney-General in the name of the People upon the relation of a private corporation having an interest in the question, a judgment awarding costs to the defendant must award them against the relator in the first instance, and against the People only in case an execution issued thereupon against the property of the relator is returned unsatisfied.<sup>5</sup> Under a statute permitting a defendant in an action in the county court to require security for costs when the plaintiff is a person residing in that county, such security may be required of a plaintiff which is a corporation and has its principal place of business there.<sup>6</sup>

§ 447. Id.: Examination Before Trial.—One desiring to take a deposition in which the party sought to be examined is a corporation must state in his affidavit the name of the officers, directors or managing agents thereof, or any of them whose testimony is necessary and material, or the books and papers as to the contents of which an examination or inspection is desired, and the order to be made in respect thereto must direct the examination of such persons and the production of such books and papers, and on such examination the books or papers or any part or parts thereof may be offered and received in evidence in addition to the use thereof by the witness to refresh his memory.<sup>7</sup> There is no rule by which, as a condition precedent to the right of an examination of a defendant corporation before trial, the plaintiff is required to request the corporation for a copy of the records and papers desired.<sup>8</sup> An order for examination before trial of a corporation by its officers may direct the production of books and papers for the use of the witness without need of a subpoena duces tecum, but not for an inspection by the adverse party.<sup>9</sup>

“ There is no authority to examine an officer of a corporation as such, apart from the examination of the corporation. . . . The proper practice . . . is to authorize the examination of the party, and then, the party being a corporation, the order should provide that the information is to be elicited by an examination of certain of its officers.”<sup>10</sup> An order for the examination before trial of a corporation should in form provide for the examination of the corporation by its proper officer; but if it direct the examination of a named person, as a specified officer of the corporation, it is an irregularity merely, which is properly cured by an amendment of the order by the court at Special Term.<sup>11</sup> An order not purporting to require a corporation but its officers individually to be examined is improper.<sup>12</sup> Persons having personal knowledge at the time they happened of facts which a party to an action to which a corporation later incorporated of which they became officers also is a party may be compelled as such officers to be examined before trial, though the order for examination call technically for the examination of the corporation through them as its officers.<sup>13</sup> A corporation of which receivers have been appointed cannot be examined through its officers by a judgment creditor in proceedings supplementary to execution when the real purpose of the examination is to find out if the plaintiff has any right of action against the officers individually under a statute.<sup>14</sup> An affidavit on which an order for examination of a corporation before trial is based must name the officer whose examination is sought and a copy of it and the order must be served on the corporation's attorney if it has appeared in the action.<sup>15</sup> It is for the party applying for an order for examination before trial of a corporation through one of its officers to show that the person to be examined, described as “ managing agent ” is in fact an officer of the corporation.<sup>16</sup> An officer of a defendant corporation may be examined when it is a party to
